

MR. LAWSON READY TO FACE CHARGES

Yes, Sireel He's Almost Defiant and Will Be in Plymouth Court to-morrow.

Thomas W. Lawson has been told by the Plymouth County Superior Court, here to-morrow in Plymouth, to get ready to appear before that court and stand to a charge of running a gambling game at the Marlborough fair in August.

The office charged against Mr. Lawson is that of conducting a lottery at the fair. The case was given away with numbers to those to everybody who went to the fair. Mr. Lawson drew the winning number out of a hat on the last day, and he gave the winner a horse, carriage and full equipment. The fair management was not the plaintiff.

He's Full of Fight.

"I am just full of fight," said Mr. Lawson yesterday. "I have been out for two weeks or more automotively to the White Mountains, just getting into shape, eating, sleeping and doing a good deal of work. I will take the consequences even if I am found guilty."

He was fined $100 by the lower court in Plymouth, and I want a trial by twelve good and true men, men who come from the good old Plymouth country. I am ready to go to the court to-morrow and fight."

Mr. Lawson made a test case of this, and then if he is convicted full go further to the Supreme Court of this State and then on to Washington to the highest court in the land.

No guile and no trickery will be shown here. I want to know about getting a trial by twelve good and true men. I want to know about getting a trial by twelve good and true men. I want to know about getting a trial by twelve good and true men.

Scrambling for a Hundred.

"If you got the hundred ready in ten minutes," he said to the court, "I will give you the hundred ready in ten minutes."

One thing is certain, I want a trial by twelve good and true men. I want to know about getting a trial by twelve good and true men. I want to know about getting a trial by twelve good and true men.

Mr. Lawson's trial will be held at the Plymouth County Superior Court to-morrow.

Greatest Ostrich Plume Sale

Ever Held in New England

A genuine sale of plume values that are simply wonderful. Owing to simple tailored styles running strongly till now, a large New York importer of ostrich feathers became overstocked, and to reduce his stock to a normal figure, he takes a positive method to make certain and successful timely reduction. That method is in producing these high-grade plumes at cost price—you reap the benefit as the result. We have held many plume sales and watched the operations of others, and can confidently state that we have never seen the equal of these plumes in quality and workmanship at anywhere near the prices we quote.

Stops Falling Hair and Destroys Dandruff

Makes the Hair Grow Long, Heavy and Luxuriant and We Can Quickly Prove It

If You Wish to Double the Beauty of Your Hair at Once, Just Get a 25 Cent Bottle and Try This

Surely try a Danderine Hair Cream if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair without draw and at a cost not worth mentioning. Just moisten a cloth with this Danderine, and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one strand at a time, until the hair is completely dry. Then wash with soap and water, and your hair will be as soft and smooth as silk.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of Dandruff, cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is the hair to what fresh showers of rain and sunlight act to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. It's exhilarating, stimulating and life-giving properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. It at once imparts a sparkling brilliancy and velvety softness to the hair, and a few weeks' use will cause new hair to sprout all over the scalp. Use it every day for a short time, after which two or three times a week will be sufficient to complete whatever growth you desire.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25 cent bottle of Keweenaw's Danderine from any drug store or color counter and try it as directed.

Cruel Combination Halts the Young Manchester Pair.

MANCHESTER, Oct. 14.—Harold M. Worthen, a young man of 21, and Miss Florence M. The law is a cruel combination of the city and the state, and it is a shame that it should be so.

A Simple Way To Reduce Wrinkles

(From The Home States)
Beas in mind that wrinkles, as well as blemishes of the face, are due to the muscular tissue losing its elasticity and shrinking. The skin is then too large in area to fit such tissue smoothly.

To remedy this condition, there is a simple wash lotion you can easily make at home. Get an ounce of powdered borax, add to it one ounce of water, and a half pint of water, mix the two and rub your face with the lotion. This treatment at once tightens the skin and removes the underlying tissue which causes wrinkles.

The progress of the New Filene Store may be judged by the rapid disappearance of the old buildings across the way. There's a new sky line every day. Become a "Charter Customer" of the New Filene's now and share in the many "year-before-moving" advantages.

HOW WE MAKE THE FILENE MACHINE-MADE DRESSES

1—Designed by the 4—Materials bought from the mills in bulk, saving much cost in each case.

2—Made by the 5—All the materials are cut on the same plan, so that the pieces will fit together perfectly.

3—Cut on the 6—Stiles and materials are stamped out by machine, so that the pieces will fit together perfectly.

One of the most creditable of the many achievements of Filene's—well-known has been in producing well-made fashionable dresses of French style, workmanship and value of materials most would probably cost more than double the amount if you had them made for you. New models are being shown weekly.

SOME RECKED REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES AND MISS MARGARET FOLEY, CHIEF RECKED OF THE SUFFRAGISTS

HER CAMPAIGN FOR SUFFRAGE CAUSE has been a long and arduous one and she has been the target of many attacks and charges.
But she has stood firm and has not been deterred by any of the attacks.
She has been the champion of the cause and has been the leader of the movement.

AMERICAN-15
THE STANDARD SUIT VALUE OF AMERICA

EVERY "AMERICAN STANDARD 15" suit or overcoat must wear perfectly, hold its stylish shape and give absolutely satisfactory service or dealer will replace it with a new garment.

To set and maintain a standard by which all dependable clothing will be judged we have got to put all-world material, better hand-tailoring, better style into "AMERICAN STANDARD 15" suits and overcoats than have ever been offered at the price.

And we are so doing it!

You actually get a $20 suit or overcoat for $15. "AMERICAN STANDARD 15" suits and overcoats are made in Baltimore—"The City of Economy"—in a big, clean, sunny factory where up-to-date machinery keeps the cost of production down to a minimum.

One dealer in nearly every town sells the "AMERICAN STANDARD 15."

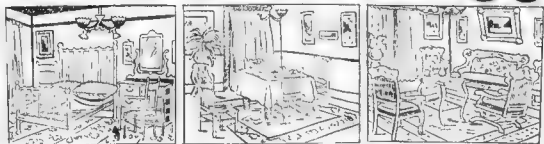

Go into 1 store, see the many patterns and styles you have to choose from and remember that there is only one price to consider.

How much better this is to buy at a fixed price, guaranteed to last, than to buy at a variable price, which you can try on before you pay for, and be sure to get a good fit and place you—than to order blindly from a catalogue.

It should not happen that no dealer in your town has the "AMERICAN STANDARD 15" suit or overcoat. Write for the list of dealers and we will send you style 1 and color card and see that your wares are filled.

"BIG CHIEF" MEYERS

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—Well, we had 'em.

What's more, having trimmed to-day the best team the American League could turn out, with their best pitcher in the box, I am willing to predict confidently that by this time next week we will be the baseball champions of the world.

I suppose you will want to know what won for us. Well, here it is

The great pitching in the tight places.
by Christy Mathewson

Our ability to hit when a hit meant something.

I will add another—though less important—reason for the satisfaction of those who rooted for the Athletics. It is this:

We were helped considerably by the nervousness of the Philadelphia players, which I suppose, was caused by the strange grounds and that wonderful crowd of 38,000. There were several plays missed by the stars, which would have been easy for our little mascot, Dick Hennessy. One of these was our first run.

But I will put _____ this _____ and credit our victory to Matty and the good old _____.

And I am proud to say that I had a share in both ends of the victory. It was one of the happiest moments of my life when I landed on an out-curve of my Indian friend, Albert Bender, in the lucky second and got to second on it. A moment equally happy was later, little as I have strung another of the Chippewa's twisters and never more agree with what proved to be the winning run.

Everybody knows that I am not a flash of light on the bases. I am more like a safe mounted on wheels. But in my private opinion, I think I broke all world's records between second and third on Devo's hit. Believe me, I put enough effort into that run to do it any other way. I felt when I put my head down and got to going, that I crossed the plate with that second tally the game was ours.

Natty told me I had looked to the bench that I was going like regular Ty Cobb—but I guess he must have been kidding a little bit. However, I never saw a more welcome sight than that whitey saucer home plate as I stepped across it.

I'm a ball player, not a writer, so I won't attempt to describe the sensation we experienced when we came into the field this afternoon. We heard a roar a few minutes before as the fans welcomed the Athletics and I must admit that I, for one, felt a bit nervous. McGraw never quite noticed that the others were the same way, so he said "Now, boys, when you go out, take it on the run like a football team do. Everybody grin and look confident. That will begin to get their goat right away."¹

PROGRESSIVE PULMONARY HYPERTENSION (PPH) is a disease of the pulmonary vasculature that is characterized by a progressive increase in pulmonary artery pressure (PA pressure) and pulmonary vascular resistance (PVR) over time. The disease is often associated with right heart failure and is a leading cause of death in patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The pathogenesis of PPH is complex and involves a combination of structural and functional changes in the pulmonary vasculature. These changes include intimal hyperplasia, medial hypertrophy, and plexiform lesions, which lead to a narrowing of the pulmonary arteries and an increase in PVR. The resulting increase in PA pressure and PVR leads to right heart failure and ultimately death. The diagnosis of PPH is based on a combination of clinical, radiographic, and hemodynamic findings. The treatment of PPH is challenging and often involves the use of pulmonary vasodilators and surgical interventions. The goal of this review is to provide a comprehensive overview of the pathogenesis, diagnosis, and treatment of PPH.

MEYERS, DEVORE AND DAVIS INDIVIDUAL STARS IN OPENING GAME

"THE GIANTS PLAYED IN LUCK" SAYS MACK

The Giants won the game all right but it must be admitted that they had all the luck. It was a shame for Bender to lose, because he has seldom been better in his life. I am willing to admit that Mathewson is a wonderful performer and that he pitched a great game. But I am still confident and believe firmly that we will get back at them Monday. Eddie Collins seldom makes an error, especially in a tight place, and the Giants will soon know him as a better ball player than they consider him now.

"THEY CAN'T STOP US" DECLARES M'GRAW

Well, it turned out just as I expected, and I don't think we will have as much trouble in the rest of the games. If we can beat Bender when he is as good as he is in this opening battle, I don't see how any of Mack's pitchers is going to stop us. Mathewson pitched wonderful ball and all the Giants played for everything that was in him. I will start Marquard Monday. He'll fool the Athletics just as Matty did, and we won't have such a hard time scoring against Mack's pitchers.

CAT'S PAW CUSHION RUBBER HEELS

To Slip or Not To Slip Is the Question

You will prefer Cat's Paw Cushion Rubber Heels because of the friction, plus a pointed feature—which positively prevents slipping and makes them wear longer.

I am willing to admit that Matheson is a wonderful performer and that he pitched a great game. But I am still confident and believe firmly that we will get back at them Monday. Eddie Collins seldom makes an error, especially in a tight place, and the Giants will soon know him as a better ball player than they consider him now.

Well, it turned out just as I expected, and I don't think we will have as much trouble in the rest of the games. If we can beat Bender when he is as good as he was in this opening battle, I don't see how any of Mack's pitchers is going to stop us. Matheson pitched wonderful ball and all the Giants played for everything that was in him. I will start Marquard Monday. He'll fool the Athletics just as Matty did, and we won't have such a hard time scoring against Mack's pitchers.

REO CAR MAKES AN EXCELLENT RECORD

According to a special news bulletin received by J. M. Lincoln, giving the full details of the recent Cross-Country Reo-Columbus three-day reliability test, this contest proved much more strenuous than previously reported. This was due to the twenty hours' heavy downpour of rain on the last two days of the contest, making many of the steep, rough roads almost impassable.

Reo cars, however, were very reliable. The Reo car, which was driven by J. M. Lincoln, made the trip in 12 hours and 15 minutes, with only one stop for fuel and one for repairs. The car was in perfect condition at the end of the trip.

AUTOS ARE TESTED IN CROSS-COUNTRY

Years ago the old, heavy wagon trains of the pioneers pulled over the Santa Fe trail and if the roads from Santa Fe to the coast were as good as the roads from Santa Fe to the coast, the trip would be a very easy one. But the roads are not as good as they were, and the trip is a very difficult one.

Reo cars, however, were very reliable. The Reo car, which was driven by J. M. Lincoln, made the trip in 12 hours and 15 minutes, with only one stop for fuel and one for repairs. The car was in perfect condition at the end of the trip.

CONSOLIDATION OF WILLYS AND GARFORD

With the formation of the Willys-Garford Sales Company, as was announced by President John H. Willys, the two companies, which have been in existence for many years, are now united. This consolidation will make the company stronger and will enable it to better serve its customers.

Reo cars, however, were very reliable. The Reo car, which was driven by J. M. Lincoln, made the trip in 12 hours and 15 minutes, with only one stop for fuel and one for repairs. The car was in perfect condition at the end of the trip.

SAVANNAH RACES ARE NEXT ON THE MOTOR SCHEDULE

With the Santa Monica Races Over and the Glidden Tour Under Way, Interest Turns to Big Events in the South Thanksgiving Week

By J. C. KERRISON.

With the holding of the race at Santa Monica, Cal., yesterday and the starting of the Glidden Tour, which comes to a close in Jacksonville on October 16, the next big event on the motor schedule will be the series of road races at Savannah.

It might really be said that the series of motor activity has been transferred to the south, as it is there that the great interest of the next few weeks will center.

The one big event of the racing year is the Grand Prix race, the Vanderbilt Cup, the Savannah Challenge Trophy and the Timken Cup, which will be held in that city during Thanksgiving week. These events will bring into action all the greatest drivers of the world and will be the greatest of the year.

The Savannah City is making every endeavor to place the course over which the contest is to be held in the very best of condition, and that it will be a record race. It is expected that the race will be a great success.

The course is absolutely one of the very fastest in the world—the greater portion of it being specially prepared by the producers of great speed, and in particular by the use of the best of the latest and most improved machinery, and absolutely free from reverse curves.

How We Did It

Year after year we have constantly increased our output. Part by part we have brought the Reo car to perfection. Gradually each important part has been standardized, and permanent machinery has been adapted to it.

Year by year we have equipped ourselves to build every part of the car—to do out of the profits of the car to keep the price at $1,000.

Every Reo agent now has this car on exhibit. You now offer this initial price. And you will find this car under $1,000 which compares for a moment with it.

One Issue of Sunday American Makes Higher Pile Than the Tallest Mountain Peak in New England

What the Largest Sunday Newspaper Circulation in New England Means.

The size of anything is only relative. There are big ants and big elephants.

You hear men talk glibly about half a million or a million dollars. Pile $10,000 in real money in a street window and people will stop and stare until they block the street.

An attempt is made on this page to give the people of New England an idea of the gigantic size of an ordinary issue of the Boston Sunday AMERICAN by a comparison with other objects.

For instance, if one speaks of height in or about Boston he is likely to say: "It is as high as Bunker Hill Monument."

If you were to pile an issue of the Boston Sunday AMERICAN, one paper on top of another, just as it is folded when you receive it, and as it lies on your library table, it would reach an altitude more than four times the height of Bunker Hill Monument.

You will see by this that you can get but a faint idea of the size of an ordinary issue of the Sunday AMERICAN by comparing it with the towering Charlestown monument, which is 221 1/6 feet high.

The highest eminence in all New England is Mt. Washington. Yet this mountain is only two-thirds as high as the pile that an issue of the Sunday AMERICAN would make, one paper on another. And Mt. Washington is 6,290 feet high.

But an issue of the Sunday AMERICAN, piled one paper on another, would reach up into the air just 9,333 feet—almost half as high as Mt. McKinley, the highest mountain in the United States.

Think of this: If 1,555 six-foot men were to stand on one another's shoulders the topmost man could just reach the topmost paper!

But probably only aeronauts and mountain climbers fully appreciate such great heights. Let us get our feet and our figures a little closer to the ground.

Take an average issue of the Sunday AMERICAN. Separate it into single sheets. Place the sheets end to end. Then you will have a paper sidewalk just 4,886 miles in length. That is much further than from Boston to San Francisco.

By this you will see that you could stretch a ribbon of Boston Sunday AMERICANS a page in width from the Atlantic to the Pacific as the broadest part of America and then have almost enough left to extend it to Honolulu—more than 5,600 miles away!

The distance from New York to Hamburg, as the steamers make the trip directly, is 4,820 miles. An issue of the Sunday AMERICAN stretched out in the way described would reach over the Atlantic ocean and connect these two cities.

Scores of other interesting comparisons could be made and New England School Teachers would probably find that it would stimulate the interest of their pupils in arithmetic if they were allowed to try it, taking the height and length figures of the Sunday AMERICAN as a basis.

So far we have appealed to the eye and the imagination. Now let us appeal to your reason.

First: The Boston Sunday AMERICAN has reached the high water mark of journalism in New England.

Second: This circulation is about 400,000 copies.

Third: This is guaranteed to be 75,000 more than the Boston Sunday Globe, giving the Sunday Globe all they claim.

Fourth: This is guaranteed to be 100,000 more than the Sunday Post, giving them all they claim.

Fifth: The Sunday AMERICAN has the fourth largest Sunday circulation in the United States. It is equalled only by the (Hearst) New York American, the New York World and the (Hearst) Chicago Examiner.

Sixth: The enormous circulation of the Sunday AMERICAN is as solid as the rock of Gibraltar. It is based on the highest quality of product the world affords. It throbs with the spirit of to-day. All that brains can produce and money can buy go to make it.

Seventh: Because of the Sunday AMERICAN'S interest in the welfare of Boston and surrounding towns and cities, it makes a peculiarly strong appeal to the people of the metropolitan section and to the people within the fifty-mile limit of Boston.

Probably never in the world has a newspaper had such a remarkable growth as the Sunday AMERICAN. The seven facts recited show what it has done in seven years.

The circulation of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN last Sunday was 391,785

The average Sunday circulation of the BOSTON AMERICAN for the past six months, including the dull months of the summer, was 382,014

The circulation of the BOSTON DAILY and SUNDAY AMERICAN is certified to by the Publishers of the American Newspaper Directory, and is open to all interested for examination at any time.

LET'S BUY MOTHER A NEW AXE

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American Journal.
12x16 cm

G HIS picture, drawn by Homer Davenport, represents actual life and one of its incidents as seen by Davenport on a farm.

The wife of the farmer, the mother of the boys, is in the middle of the picture, working as usual. She is bringing in a pail of milk from the barn, and on the way in, after milking the cow, she has chopped up an armful of wood for the stove.

She has still plenty to do. Her work will not end until the lights go out. And she will put them out when the farmer and the boys are all in bed.

Inside the house, as Davenport tells the story, the husband and his sons, all grown men, are asking themselves, "What can we do for mother?"

One of them accidentally has remembered—that she has probably forgotten—that the next day will be her birthday. They are whispering among themselves, saying that they really ought to do something for mother on this important occasion.

Some years have passed since anybody remembered her birthday. Now it has been remembered and something appropriate must be done.

Mother, who knows nothing about it, busies herself as usual chopping wood and milking the cow. Just before she enters the house one of the men has hit upon a magnificent idea which meets instant, enthusiastic approval.

"That old axe of mother's is all chipped

When Life Is Over, and It Is Too Late to Do Anything but Regret Neglect of the Person Gone, All That Is Left Is Sentimentality and Remorse. It Is a Pity We Do Not Do More for Those That Live and Talk Less About Those That Are Gone. This Is Davenport's Story of "THE PRESENT FOR MOTHER" and blunt. She can hardly cut with it any more," says the man with the brilliant idea. "LET'S GET MOTHER A NEW AXE."

Mother goes in, nothing is said.

But on the next day, to her intense surprise, she finds beside the woodpile a new axe, very sharp and shiny, the blade like silver, the thick top of the blade faintly gilded.

Her proud husband and sons tell her that this is a birthday present. The poor old woman, so used to neglect and hard work, is delighted and overcome with joy at the wonderful present—although it is nothing in the world but an invitation for her to go ahead and chop more wood.

Davenport knows the men that bought the new axe "for Mother." He draws this picture to impress upon fathers and sons and brothers the cold brutality with which they accept and calmly ignore devotion and the affection given them so willingly and taken as a matter of course.

When the old woman in this picture dies there will be loud lamentation at the funeral.

The husband and the sons will indulge in noisy grief and they will be assured by their neighbors that they ought to be comforted and happy "because you always did everything for her."

Whereas the fact is, that she always did everything for them, and all that they did for her was to get her the new axe so that she might go on chopping.

Many millions of men live quite contented with themselves who are in a class with the men that bought the new axe.

Not only the old women that milk the cows, chop the wood, bake the bread, make the beds, wash, scrub, sweep out, call the men in the morning and cook for the hired hands are neglected and sorrowful.

An old woman can be just as unhappy, living in the care of a son who gives her a fine home, fine automobile, plenty of comforts, all the money she can spend, BUT WHO DOESN'T GIVE HIMSELF or his affection.

It isn't the money you give or the presents you give that count in life, or that count when life is over.

Nothing counts except kindness, real affection and personal devotion.

Many mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters have had given to them presents that hurt as though the present had been a blow, because it was a present that took the place of affection. The present that can be given without effort or self-denial or personal devotion means nothing.

If only it were possible to impress upon human beings the realities of life, without waiting for those realities to become a part of past experience.

There are millions of men that will live bitterly to regret the neglect of a father or a mother, or a brother or sister, when it is too late for regret to do any good.

When it is too late, then will come the lamentations, the regrets, an earnest, desperate wish that it were possible to call back the one gone and atone for days and years of cold indifference, for the meaningless material kindness, without the kindness of affection.

The man who reads this should think of those now beside him who will some day be gone. He should try to realize what his feelings will be when it shall have become too late to make reparation, and then without further delay do his full duty and thus prepare for himself peace of mind in the future.

There is only one kind of a happy life possible in this world, and that is a life based upon duty.

Do what you ought to do (you always KNOW what you ought to do, if you ask your conscience) and you will find that any kind of life, poor or rich, high or low, can be made a happy life.

In spite of neglect, overwork and sorrow, the old woman in this picture is happy and one to be envied, for she at least has done her duty every day. While she has not had one thought of self-approval, and sacrifices her life an inch at a time as a matter of course, she has no remorse, no bitter sense of duty neglected.

And when her hands are folded for the last time, and rest finally settles on her wrinkled face, it will be a happy face, reflecting a life of goodness and devotion.

The man who ill treats another ill treats himself.

The man who cheats another or neglects another, cheats or neglects himself. All that we do reacts most strongly upon ourselves.

Man to be worthy of the name must use his physical strength to improve the material world about him and use his spiritual strength to add happiness to the spiritual life of those that depend on him.

There is no other real life.

FIRST PICTURE OF THE PARNELL MONUMENT IN DUBLIN TO REACH BOSTON

This picture shows the crowd at the dedication of the Parnell monument, which has become one of the sights of the Irish city. The unveiling, an epochal day in Erin's history, was marked by an oration by John E. Redmond, who paid an enduring tribute to the leader who fought to lift the yoke of oppression from his people. Mr. Parnell is shown at left and Mr. Redmond at right.

BIX—Hello, been hanging up the wash?
DIX—Why?
BIX—You're all as usual.
DIX—I've been at Asbury Park for two weeks.
BIX—Have a good time?
DIX—My wife was with me.
BIX—Leaving that fast out, how was it?
DIX—Very good. Everything dry but the ocean.
BIX—No wrong drink there, eh?
DIX—Not a drop. They even take the ginger out of the ginger ale.
BIX—Cute, any fish?
DIX—I tried it, but couldn't get a live on them.
BIX—Many girls go fishing?
DIX—Lots of them. Successfully, too.
BIX—What do they do with the catches?
DIX—Lobsters and suckers.
BIX—What built do they use?
DIX—Just a figure and two eyes.
BIX—What do they do with the catches?
DIX—The little ones are thrown overboard.
BIX—And the big ones?
DIX—Well, a real big one will keep all Summer.
BIX—How is the humor down there? Dry, too?
DIX—You bet. I loaned my razor to the farmer who supplied the hotel with vegetables, and the next day he gave me a hog. He said, "Here's your razor-buck."
BIX—What became of the hog?
DIX—Oh, he made a pig of himself and died.
BIX—Had you a room facing the ocean?
DIX—Yes, the Pacific Ocean. I gave it up after the first night.
BIX—What? The ocean?
DIX—No, the room.
BIX—How was your room at the next place you stayed?
DIX—The room hit me about right. But the people at my table in the dining room were too polite.
BIX—Too polite?
DIX—Yes. I sat stonily and of course finish a meal quickly. Arising from the table when finished I would say, "Excuse me," and they would respond, "With the greatest of pleasure."

DIX—Did you like that photo postcard I sent you?
DIX—Yes. But I couldn't make out what the object was at the feet of the two girls. Looked like a piece of wreckage.
BIX—That was me. What do you think of the girls?
DIX—"They look as though they ought to know better than to go bathing with you. Did you make an impression?"
DIX—Sure—in the sand.
DIX—Do many go bathing?
BIX—Everybody does. It is so crowded that it is impossible to kick your own legs.
DIX—Just fancy!
BIX—No, plain kicking.
DIX—You ride in the rolling chairs?
DIX—No. But I would push my wife along in one for an hour every night.
DIX—Good. How you men suffer.
DIX—Suffer? Not for that hour. I could lamp the pretty girls without wifery setting on.
DIX—If she did get on she'd get off. Last year, at Atlantic City, I lost my best girl on account of a rolling chair.
BIX—You did?
DIX—Yes. I was wheeling her about and stopped to get a cigar. While I was gone, an old bean of hers came along and pushed her off. It was then that my hopes of wedded bliss rolled away.
BIX—Say, now, that's too bad.
DIX—And the worst was that I had paid for the chair in advance.
BIX—Did you ever see her again?
DIX—Yes, the next day. But she was so changed. Even her name was different. Oh! what I have missed!
BIX—Yes. Oh! what you have missed, you lucky dog, you! The largest organ in the world is at Ocean Grove.

DIX—Does it catch cold when it peals?
BIX—Well, I noticed that all the pipes were "stopped."
DIX—How are the Sunday's at Asbury?
BIX—About the same as here. On Saturday night we'd say, "Nothing to do till Monday."
DIX—Quiet as all that, eh?
BIX—You bet.
DIX—Did you consult the Information Bureau for good hotel?
BIX—No, but I overheard a man asking if the moths were good at a certain place, and he was told that "The Bureau wasn't allowed to say anything against any hotel."
DIX—Were there any low matches among the young folks?
BIX—I didn't light upon any. But there were a few farces among the married couples.
DIX—Any old maid at your place?
BIX—Yes, one old maid, who was made up, but not "made over." She wore a wedding ring.
DIX—Why did she wear the ring?
BIX—For a "nice" no-odd. Rather a bright old dame, she was.
DIX—Any grass widows?
BIX—Yes, we had one of them, too. She had hay fever.
DIX—She must have been a grass widow a long while. Any one of importance there?
BIX—Only the head waiter. A regular Jack John son. What do you suppose he said to me, after I'd been there a week with all the tipping?
DIX—What?
BIX—He said, "I suppose you know that every dark cloud must have a silver lining."
DIX—Did your waiter hint for tips, too?
BIX—Well, after he'd gone tipsless for two mornings, he said "I guess you all don't like his style."

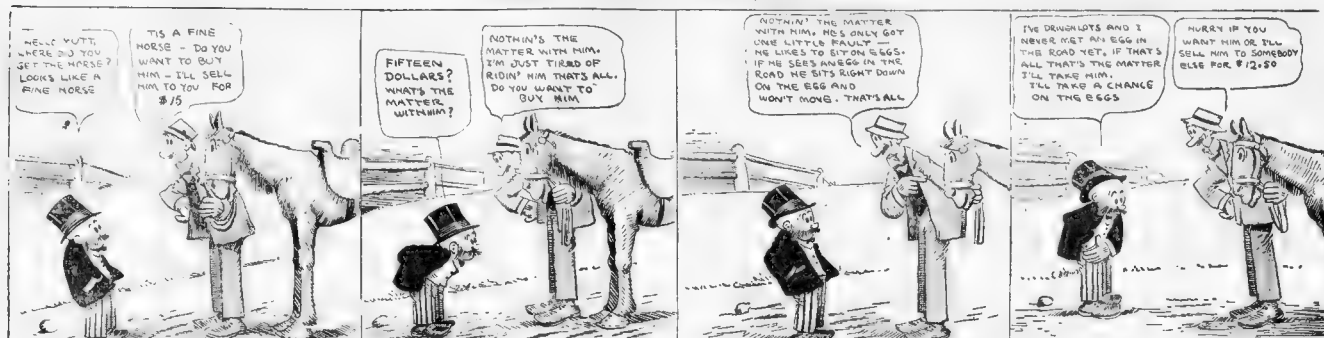

DIX—Didn't you have anything to say in answer to those hints?
BIX—I told them they shouldn't expect to get tips in a dry town.
DIX—Did you get an opportunity to take a sail on the ocean?
BIX—I went on a fishing trip aboard a one-master. We didn't get many fish, but I learned a new kissing game.
DIX—What was it?
BIX—A "hook" snuck.
DIX—I suppose you had to use your "hooks," too.
DIX—I got the best of one girl in the game. When it came my turn to kiss her, she said, "I'd sooner kiss my dog first."
DIX—Well?
DIX—I told her I'd take mine after the dog.
DIX—I didn't know that Bie was an aviator.
BIX—What makes you think he is?
DIX—He spoke of taking a flying trip to Chicago.
BIX—My wife is learning to make pies. This morning she asked me what kind should she try.
DIX—What did you tell her?
BIX—I told her to try lemon. Then if it shouldn't turn out well, it would be a "lemon" anyway.
DIX—I read of a peculiar thing today. Two doctors were on a fishing trip together, and one of them looked a corpse, although both doctors tried to land it, got away.
BIX—What's peculiar about that?
DIX—That it got away from two doctors with its life.
BIX—How is that smart little nephew of yours?
DIX—He put over a bright one on his ma yesterday. He was playing "cat" with his sister and, wanting her to move over he pulled her forcibly by the hair. His mother happened to see the action and asked him why he didn't ask sister to move over. My nephew replied, "Well, ma you always say 'actions speak louder than words'."

How 8-Year-Old Wizzy Bought a Motor Car--and Didn't Know It

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Editors Great Britain Rights Reserved

NED JESSUP, his wife, Victoria, and their eight-year-old boy, Wizzy, have just moved into the suburbs. Jessup is a rising young lawyer, and, with the co-operation of his pretty little wife, has managed to lay aside enough to pay outright for their new home, besides crediting $1,200 to little Wizzy's bank account. Although paying for the house has taken all their reserve fund, they are very happy. They have been settled but a few days when friends, all in motors, began to call.

CHARACTERS IN THE SCENE:
NED JESSUP.....Young Lawyer
VICTORIA.....His Wife
WIZZY.....Their Boy
CAROLINE.....A Friend, an Enthusiastic Motorist
MR. AND MRS. PODMORE.....More Motor Friends

CAROLINE—You're going to get into things down here, enter a bit, join the Country Club.
VICTORIA—Well, they'll have to be a little careful at first. And then—the Country Club's so far away.

CAROLINE—Seven miles? Why, it's nothing. Fifteen minutes on the second speed.

VICTORIA—Oh, but we don't own a car, you know.

CAROLINE—You don't?—What?

VICTORIA—We don't own a motor.

CAROLINE (laughs)—But, my poor, dear Vic! It's the dearest need to own a motor. It's unclassified.

VICTORIA—Oh, hardly as bad as that.

CAROLINE—But I'm serious, Vic. Ah, what a fool I am! You're chaffing me. I noticed your garage.

VICTORIA—Falsely, pretence.

You see, the man who built this place failed and we bought it in cheap. Ned's going to turn the garage into a playhouse for Wizzy.

—Oh, Caroline, you haven't asked to see Wizzy?

CAROLINE—What is it, a dog?

VICTORIA—Caroline! Wizzy's my own little boy.

CAROLINE—Oh, of course I'd forgotten you had a family. So sorry. But I never can remember people's children. It's all I can do nowadays to keep from running over them. I've given up slowing down for chickens—but does and children! One has to draw the line somewhere.

VICTORIA (indignantly)—I should say so.

CAROLINE—Well, if you're indignant—so am I. The place for children's the nursery, not the high-road. And good heavens, Vic, it's certainly not the garage. Playhouse, indeed. Why, it's like turning a church into a stable.

VICTORIA—You won't talk like this when you're married.

CAROLINE—I won't marry a man who knows less about a machine than I do—and pride forbids me to marry a chauffeur. No, I've taken the veil—the automobile veil, you understand.

VICTORIA—You're the same old Caroline—with a new twist. Last time, it was horses—now it's automobiles. How have I gotten along without you?

CAROLINE—Oh, you've had Wizzy. Fads may come and fads may go, but kids go on forever. I'll have to come to it some day. But just a moment, I want to talk to you seriously.

VICTORIA—Oh, of course, if —

CAROLINE—Please don't be offended, Vic. This is really important. Vic, you must have at least one motor car right away.

VICTORIA—We can't afford it.

CAROLINE—Robb! You sound like the Dark Ages. Now listen to me. This place is very pretty and all that, but without a motor car it is absolutely worthless.

VICTORIA (astounded)—I believe you are in earnest —

CAROLINE—I am, I am! It's the first chance I've had for years to do a real piece of missionary work. Why, my dear Vic, you use knives and forks at table, don't you?

VICTORIA—Often, one at a time.

CAROLINE—Well, a country house without an auto is like a table without knives and forks. It's more savagery. But, it's surely obvious. How are you going to get about?

VICTORIA—Well, I suppose we may have to hire a horse now and then.

CAROLINE—Too slow—and bad form. Moreover, if you haven't got a car, you can't talk car. And if you can't talk car, well, you might as well not know how to play cards. Socially, you're an outsider. People peer at you.

VICTORIA—I suppose that is—partly—true. But after all, Ned and I mean to live quietly and —

CAROLINE—You won't. You can't. You've come to the wrong neighborhood. And you're both too attractive to escape observation. No, my child—owning a place like this carries obligations with it. Garage oblige!

(Enter Jessup, with hands full of catalogues.)

JESSUP—See here, Vic. This is the afternoon mail. I'm tired of getting automobile catalogues. Besides, the government ought to forbid them. They're much too fascinating for a poor devil who wanted to be a locomotive engineer and was forced by an unforgiving parent to become a lawyer. They're a continuous temptation to bankruptcy.

VICTORIA—Caroline thinks we might as well be dead and buried as we own a car.

JESSUP—Well, as for me, I shouldn't give a hang for one that runs all right. But I certainly would like to have a third-hand junk heap to tinker with.

JESSUP—No. If I didn't keep it under with a strong hand I'd be inventing things and ruin my family. (at window)—Hello! Here comes Podmore and his modern family—wife, dog and automobile.

VICTORIA—Oh, my gracious! And I haven't ordered tea (bewildered mood). Tea, Mary, as soon as you can.

MARY (frosting head)—Sooner, mum. (Exit.)

VICTORIA—Well, if this were Heaven instead of Cedar Hedge I wouldn't stand such impudence

new twist. Last time, it was horses—now it's automobiles. How have I gotten along without you?

CAROLINE—Oh, you've had Wizzy. Fads may come and fads may go, but kids go on forever. I'll have to come to it some day. But just a moment, I want to talk to you seriously.

They're much too fascinating for a poor devil who wanted to be a locomotive engineer and was forced by an unforgiving parent to become a lawyer. They're a continuous temptation to bankruptcy.

VICTORIA—Caroline thinks we might as well be dead and buried as we own a car.

JESSUP—Well, as for me, I shouldn't give a hang for one that runs all right. But I certainly would like to have a third-hand junk heap to tinker with.

JESSUP—No. If I didn't keep it under with a strong hand I'd be inventing things and ruin my family. (at window)—Hello! Here comes Podmore and his modern family—wife, dog and automobile.

VICTORIA—Oh, my gracious! And I haven't ordered tea (bewildered mood). Tea, Mary, as soon as you can.

MARY (frosting head)—Sooner, mum. (Exit.)

VICTORIA—Well, if this were Heaven instead of Cedar Hedge I wouldn't stand such impudence

new twist. Last time, it was horses—now it's automobiles. How have I gotten along without you?

CAROLINE—Oh, you've had Wizzy. Fads may come and fads may go, but kids go on forever. I'll have to come to it some day. But just a moment, I want to talk to you seriously.

VICTORIA—Oh, of course, if —

CAROLINE—Please don't be offended, Vic. This is really important. Vic, you must have at least one motor car right away.

VICTORIA—We can't afford it.

CAROLINE—Robb! You sound like the Dark Ages. Now listen to me. This place is very pretty and all that, but without a motor car it is absolutely worthless.

VICTORIA (astounded)—I believe you are in earnest —

CAROLINE—I am, I am! It's the first chance I've had for years to do a real piece of missionary work. Why, my dear Vic, you use knives and forks at table, don't you?

VICTORIA—Often, one at a time.

CAROLINE—Well, a country house without an auto is like a table without knives and forks. It's more savagery. But, it's surely obvious. How are you going to get about?

VICTORIA—Well, I suppose we may have to hire a horse now and then.

CAROLINE—Too slow—and bad form. Moreover, if you haven't got a car, you can't talk car. And if you can't talk car, well, you might as well not know how to play cards. Socially, you're an outsider. People peer at you.

VICTORIA—I suppose that is—partly—true. But after all, Ned and I mean to live quietly and —

CAROLINE—You won't. You can't. You've come to the wrong neighborhood. And you're both too attractive to escape observation. No, my child—owning a place like this carries obligations with it. Garage oblige!

(Enter Jessup, with hands full of catalogues.)

JESSUP—See here, Vic. This is the afternoon mail. I'm tired of getting automobile catalogues. Besides, the government ought to forbid them. ADVENTURES OF HAROLD HANGOVER

By William F. Kirk

(Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

THE last installment of Harold Hangover's Rasbott Adventures, for the season of 1911, concludes in this issue of the City Life Section. As the result of the present race and the world's series are in doubt when the following lines were written, the fans must wait a bit on their imagination while reading the story of this last great game.

Beginning in next Sunday's City Life Section there will be recorded the adventures of Harold Hangover in vaudeville.

The End of the Season.

"AND so I am not to participate in the financial end of the world's series?" gasped Harold Hangover, feeling backward as though he had been the last guest at a breakfast dinner.

"That's the way the land lays, my boy," replied McGraw, not unkindly, for he saw the look of pain that was stealing over the face of the great Oshoboo pitcher. "You see, it's this way: there are so many ways for this money to go, and so many of our players who have wives and children at home. Think of all those little mouths to be fed!"

Without another word the famous Wisconsin twirler left the club house, black, bitter rage seething in his heart. As he took a short rest over toward Brennan's quiet old tavern, he reflected, as a wounded deer might reflect, on the strange workings of fate. He recalled the many triumphs that the Giants owed to him and to his allies.

Finally brushing a tear from his trembling lower lip, he squared his shoulders and strode manfully into the tavern. Seeking a table in the rear of the little retreat, he called for October ale.

"We have no October ale, sir," said the polite waiter.

"It ain't out till November. But we have some fine April ale, one last bottle of it. I was about to serve it to this gentleman at the next table, but perhaps he will design to share it with you."

A pleasant faced young lad at the next table smiled winnily.

"Where did you dig up that word 'design' if I may be so bold as to inquire?" he asked the waiter.

"Certainly I shall be glad to have this gentleman join me. My name is Stuart Lee," he continued, addressing Harold Hangover.

"I see that you, too, are in trouble. I am here because I was unable to pass the examination at Annapolis. They said I was too short."

"How short are you?" asked Harold, warily. "You misunderstand me, sir," said Lee. "I am in funds. I mean that my stature was too scant when it came to the Annapolis examination." "That's funny," said Harold Hangover. "I expect to be short myself before I get back to Oshoboo." Together they went into their lair.

CHAPTER LI

The Redemption of Harold Hangover.

THE most sensational world's series since 1905 was nearing its end. But one game remained to be played, that game to decide the 1911 championship.

Mathewson was being hit hard. The great blond hero of a decade was weakening, and small wonder. The long, grueling campaign through which he had passed had gradually left their mark, and now, in this crucial game, it was plain to be seen that the Athletics would triumph unless help came to McGraw.

Harold, the pitching sensation of the 1911 season, had already done more than his share, not only during the season, but in the wonderful series now drawing to a close. He had pitched an extra inning game the day before, straining another ligament in his wonderful left arm, and was under a doctor's care.

In the seventh inning, this was the situation: The score stood five to three in favor of the Giants, but the Athletics were at bat with nobody out and the bases full, and with the heaviest artillery of the enemy waiting in a row of three.

The leader of the Giants turned and saw—HAROLD HANGOVER.

"Bless your heart!" gasped McGraw, wringing the hand of our hero. "You have come in the nick of time!"

Little more remains to be told. Harold Hangover was himself, and never did an audience see such a variety of curves and shades. The score ball; the barber ball; the Murphy ball; the Pittsburgh ball; the whistling ball; and he went!

"I suppose I get my slice of the world's series coin now, Mac?" he asked, as they walked arm in arm to the clubhouse.

"Yes," said McGraw, "and mine!"

THE END.

THE HOUSEHOLD DICTIONARY

Edited By WEX JONES

(Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

(Bring a completion of new house-hold goods, papers and their notes, and brought together into one handy volume. No home should be without one.)

ASBESTOS—This is a fireproof substance which can be used for many purposes in the house. You have probably noticed the asbestos curtains in theaters, where they are not nearly so useful as in kitchens, and yet how seldom do we see one of these invaluable things in the ordinary home.

The asbestos curtain should be hung about three feet from the front of the kitchen stove and should be lowered just before the hired girl lights the fire in the morning. When she coaxes the blaze with gasolene the curtain will effectively prevent the remainder of the kitchen from dancing, and thus pay for itself in the course of three hired girls.

Asbestos gloves may also be used at the dinner table for picking up hot potatoes.

ASHCAN—As everybody knows, the great objection to the ordinary ashcan is the awful racket it makes when bumped upon the sidewalk—so it always is bumped by the persons who empty it.

This objection is entirely removed in the new musical ashcan, one of which should be outside every home.

The plan is very simple and should have been adopted long before.

The bottom of the new ashcan is a double one, and contains a simple mechanism resembling that of a common music box. When the ashcan is slammed upon the sidewalk the music is started and the strains drown the noise of any further bumping.

It is obvious that lively airs should be selected for the ashcan—ragtime, if possible—as the noise of rattling on the sidewalk requires the use of drowning. "Alexander's Rag Time Band" is very suitable.

HIRED GIRL (See also asbestos)—This is a topic which cannot be properly discussed in the limits of a handy guide such as this is. The subject would require two or three volumes. "Getting a Hired Girl" would fill one, "Keeping the Hired Girl" another. There is but one way to get a hired girl—bridey; and but one way to keep her permanently—by marrying her. Since the comic papers deal so much with the hired girl, readers who need further information should subscribe to one of them.

GASOLENE—This is very useful in the house. (1) For taking spots off clothes. (2) For taking spots off stoves.

COAL—Unless you live in a flat it is well to know something of coal.

In the first place, coal is always about a dollar higher in price than it was the year before. This is probably due to the fact that more coal is mined every year, and consequently there are more miners to be paid.

In the next place, one ton always seems smaller than another.

Thirdly, you will always burn far more than you expect. This applies alike to "hard" and to "open" winters.

Also, no matter how much you burn, the house will always seem cold.

You should remember, as well, that while slate figures in the weight of coal, it is practically useless for heating purposes.

CHICKENS—While not exactly in the strict line of housework, nevertheless a supply of fresh eggs and tender squabs is very desirable. To ensure such a supply for the house, do not on any account attempt to keep chickens in the yard, but deal with a thoroughly reliable grocer or marketman.

If you have chickens of your own you will be compelled to eat the tough ones, and won't even have the satisfaction of making a kick to the butcher.

MILK—Nothing is more necessary in the house than plenty of fresh milk. To ensure the supply very economically, you must do just two things:

(1) Get up before your next door neighbor does. (2) Hook his milk bottle.

Grin's Modern Fairy Tales==THE PRINCE AND THE PIKER

(Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

ONCE upon a time there was a young woman who married a very wealthy young man. She was indeed fortunate because he lavished every attention upon her and bought her everything she could desire.

Her husband's name was Harold, but he was a decent, manly sort of chap in spite of that. Her name was Fluffy, yet even at that the name was too heavy for her mentality.

For quite a while she got along all right, in her way, but it didn't appreciate the fact that about twenty or thirty million young women, with ten times the good looks, twenty times the brains, and forty times the common sense that she possessed were playing along happy and contented on an income that wouldn't keep her in silk robes de nuit.

She thought there was something missing from her life.

She was right; there was, but it wasn't what she thought it was. What she missed was brains, while she thought it was a romance.

Then one day the Piker came along. Now this Piker was younger than Harold, with curly hair and red cheeks, and not enough sense to fill the cranial cavity of an undernourished goat.

Fluffy saw the Piker and the Piker saw Fluffy. Fluffy saw him first.

Just then she had a mental convulsion which she took to be a thought. To her the Piker seemed much more to be desired than Harold. To be sure all her acquaintances said Harold was a regular Prince, and all, or nearly all, her feminine acquaintances were envious of her in her possession of such a wealthy, kind and manly husband.

But Fluffy was so much lighter than her name she was promptly impressed with the Piker's red cheeks and curly hair. Because the Piker lacked the brains to think, twice on the same subject in the same day, there was naturally no intelligence in his eyes, and so they looked soulful, after the manner of a cow masticating a mouthful of timothy hay.

But Fluffy thought the Piker's eyes expressed love and romance and sentiment and soul. As a matter of fact, every time the Piker looked like that he was struggling with the most serious problem of wondering if, after all, it would not have been better for him to have worn his lavender socks along with his purple cravat.

"What is your business?" asked Fluffy of the Piker, soon after she met him.

"I'm a perfectly good tinsmith," said the Piker, proudly.

"How grand is to be of some use in this dreary world," sighed Fluffy. "Now, Harold—my husband—Mr. Strong, you know, if he could do so much as make a—anything out of tin."

"He seems to have tin enough," replied the Piker, who at rare moments had flashes of almost human intelligence.

"Ah, but what is money?" gurgled Fluffy, looking slushily at the Piker.

"You can search me," responded the Piker.

"Now, my husband—Mr. Strong—never did any noble work in his life. He couldn't, he doesn't know how," complained Fluffy. The Piker was about to make some remark about there being no necessity when it occurred to him that this might be to his advantage to kid her along, so he sympathized with her.

As a matter of fact Harold could go into the Street and buy or bear some stocks a few hours and drag out more profit than the Piker could earn tinning all the house-tops in Washington, D.C.

But Fluffy lacked sufficient brains to understand this. She had always had everything she desired and so, when she saw the Piker with his red cheeks and curly hair and bovine eyes, she thought she wanted him.

And the Piker was quite willing, because she had more money with her on a short shopping trip than he could earn in five years.

"It must have been a good fairy that sent him to me," she told herself, because that was the handiest thing she could think of to say. And so one evening when Harold was sitting at dinner with her, she said, with all the diplomacy of a stock room roller:

"Harold, it is not you I love, but the Tinsmith."

"What?" asked Harold, feigning surprise.

"Yes, I thought I would mention it," said Fluffy, sweetly, trying with the coffee and yawning.

Harold's curly hair gave a good imitation of "nerves" by appling his cordial. Finally he spoke:

"Something must be done," he said.

"It has already been done. I have packed my trunks. Well, so long," added Fluffy, as she arose and ordered the maid to call a taxi.

"Longer than that," muttered Harold.

"What's that?" sharply asked Fluffy, who was a bit disappointed because Harold didn't go into convulsions.

"I said, 'This is terrible!'" responded Harold glibly. "See," he told himself, "I'm a bum actor, whereupon he pretended to be heartbroken and made quite a scene."

And so Fluffy went away quite well pleased with herself. She started up a cozy little flat where the Piker called regularly and all the newspapers printed columns and columns about it. All the world that didn't know Harold, the Prince, sympathized with him. All those who knew him and his wife secretly congratulated him.

But no one knew there was really a good fairy connected with it all. It happened like this:

Some years before a clever young lawyer got caught in the stock market. He appealed to Harold for advice, telling him all his savings were invested.

"I know some people don't in the Street," said Harold, "and I think I can fix it up for you," and within a week the young lawyer, who had been a college classmate of Harold's, had got back his money, with much more besides.

The lawyer was correct. I learn how Harold, or "The Prince," as they called him, could do it, so he investigated and learned that it was Harold himself who had been hammering those particular stocks down and that, by losing his coup, he let up on the stocks and pulled his friend through.

Ever after that the lawyer was Harold's best friend. Usually, the best friend is the first to "fix up a man's home." The lawyer did not, so he had his eyes open and was not surprised when Harold came to him for advice.

What Harold told the lawyer concerned Fluffy. "Tell your friend Fluffy to get married," said the lawyer. "Wait," said the lawyer. "Furthermore, if she springs any of this soul-mate business will it break your heart?"

"It wouldn't even dent it," laughed Harold.

"Well, then, if this works, pretend to be heart-broken."

"But why?" asked Harold.

"Tell your friend," said the lawyer, and so it happened that the day after Fluffy went away with the Piker Harold dropped into the lawyer's office.

"Has it happened?" asked the lawyer.

"Uh-huh," grinned Harold.

"Here, you, look pleased," yelled the lawyer.

"I do, in public, but I've got to let a smile loose now and then," said Harold. "But tell me—"

"After the divorce," said the lawyer.

It took the judge almost eighteen minutes to grant Harold his divorce. He had to take oath that he did not connive with his wife for the separation.

"Now," said the lawyer, "if you had appeared pleased at your wife's leaving you the judge would not have believed you when you said you did not connive with her for the separation."

"I owe you a great debt of gratitude," said Harold.

"And that's all," replied the lawyer.

As for Fluffy and the Piker, they were such a happy couple that they thought of the possibility of needing funds. They also forgot that upon their marriage, which occurred when the degree became final, Fluffy would lose all chance for alimony.

As a perfectly good tinsmith the Piker earned almost $14 a week. Fluffy used to spend more than that for bonbons and cologne lots.

The result was that they lived unhappily ever after in three back rooms.

And now where does the fairy part of this tale fit in?

Why, the lawyer was the good fairy.

For it was he who nursed up the Piker, after a long consultation with Harold, and introduced him to Fluffy.

It Wasn't a Can Opener---It Was An Ice Pick! New Jokes at the Theatres

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Good-Deeds Rights Reserved.

THERE were cereals, beans, soup, biscuits, macaroni. Lured by the enthusiasm of its label, she chose a can of soup, carried it to the kitchen table and selected a can-opener from the table drawer.

The can proved elusive, difficult. The directions for opening it were vague: "Open," was all they said. There was no cover to come off, no mark to indicate where to begin. Maria Ross, jabbing violently, produced several small holes, from which a grayish liquid, not at all like the pictured contents, began to ooze; but still the can was far from opened. She worked at it with mounting temper till it sprang from her hands and went clattering across the floor.

"Well, don't, then," she burst out, and then, with a long, bitter sigh, she took down a can of hard-boiled eggs.

Three minutes later that can was lying down, somewhat mangled, but still intact, while Maria Ross seized a long, jagged scratch across one hand.

"Don't they want their old cans to open?" she murmured. "What right have they to make them like that? Why does anyone buy them when they act so?" Then her head went down on the kitchen table.

"I won't keep house—I hate it—I won't. It is not fair!" came belatedly from behind her ear.

A sound brought her head up with a damaged start. It was her own door-bell, rang faintly, almost timidly, yet in unmistakable summons. She hesitated unheroically, then, pressing her palm across her cheeks and eyes, she went slowly to the door.

In the lighted hall without stood her neighbor from across the way, and he held in one hand a Canton bowl, whence issued a potent steam. He wore his coat new, and a general air of being freshly washed, and his hair was combed.

"Did your cook come?"

Maria Ross, standing back in the shadow, shook her head. "No," she answered, she seemed to say without lowering the steady gaze of her breath. He appeared relieved.

"I thought she might not, as I brought you some soup." He advanced the bowl a little, still awaiting a how it would be received. "Will you let me—would you mind if I— it's really good, and a whole meal in itself. I made it. Could you?"

"Yes, as very kind." In spite of her—she, her voice quavered as "And" she turned and let him follow her to the kitchen. One hurried can still rolled on the floor; now, dented but unscathed, lay on the table. At the sight her anger flamed up again.

"I couldn't open them. No one could. It isn't fair to make them like that. I'm a doctor. I've hurt myself and hurt myself, and I have kept house!"

"I know!" His big voice roared down, soothing and sympathetic. "It is hard till you get the knack. Just let me show you how to open these things; it's nothing when you know. Where is the can opener?"

She had dropped down exhaustedly in a chair by the table. "Right there. I think I've broken the post of the dairy door."

He picked up the implement she pointed out, and a quick intake of breath made her glance hastily up. For an unguarded second, she had thought that he was going to laugh; but his face was supremely grave.

"That partly accounts for it," he said, with deferential grace. "You see, this is an ice pick."—One of the many amusing experiences a girl has upon her first attempt to keep house—as told by John Tait's "Ten-Things in her kitchen story."

JUST A FEW FUNNY EPITAPHS BY GLENN GUERNSEY

In order that the readers of the City Life Section might be provided with light and frivolous literature, the Graveyard Editor was sent to all the cemeteries of the United States, Hoboken and other sections of the world, in search of quaint and queer epitaphs. In order to save space, the names of the cemeteries where the appended epitaphs were found are not given, the well-known reputation of the City Life Section being (we hope) sufficient guaranty of their genuineness.

HERE lies John Tait's wife No. 1.
Her toil is over, her work is done.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 2.
The parly gates she has passed through.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 3.
In Heaven we'll reunite her.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 4.
And may I never see her more.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 5.
To please me she did humbly strive.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 6.
She, too, has crossed the river Styx.

Here lies John Tait's wife No. 7.
I doubt if she has gone to Heaven.

Here lies, at last, poor old John Tait.
I GOT HIS GOAT. Wife No. 8.

HERE rest the bones of Mary Ann Proctor.
She had a mental science doctor.
If she had stuck to herbs and salts
She wouldn't be in here, here vaults.

THIS is the grave of Hothothed Bill.
And steel more honest he never will.
He danced on air 'neath yonder tree,
And the way he quipped was a sight to see.

HERE lies John Tomkins.
And you, too, would be dead,
If a big motor truck
Should run over your head.

HERE lies John Crane. The village store
He kept a score of years or more.
His wife at the same old stand will be,
So pitiable home industry.

JOHN SMITH.
He lost his hearing because of Another fellow's blunder.
So, Gabriel, when you blow your horn,
Please tell him to hush.

To the Memory of JANE ELIZABETH PECK
She ate four-roads,
And so did I.
But I got well.

While she did do.
She got her wings,
To Heaven she flew.
But for his mercy
I'd be there, too.

HENRY PECK.
Beneath this sod
My husband's free from toil and strife.

And so, too, is his loving wife—
For he'd insurance on his life.

HERE lie the remains Of Dr. Speer.
And most of his patients
Are also here.

HERE lies all that is mortal of the man
Who sold fire extinguishers in our town.
If they don't work any better where he
Is now than they do here—he's a conder.

JACK went to work in a dynamite mill
At a common sort of a task.
Of mixing a lot of peculiar things
In a peculiar-looking cask.

We knew about Jack's yearning
To achieve success at the job.
We were sure he'd get promotion,
For he never slipped a cog.

Things went wrong at the factory—
In the air his roof had faded,
And Jack's line here beneath this mound,
To another world translated.

"WHAT's the best way to preserve peaches?"
"Don't introduce them to anybody."

"Isn't it strange that our cow won't give milk?"
"What's the trouble?"

"I don't know. The farmer has to take it from her."
"What's the trouble?"

"We left the bloodhounds to guard the money."
"What's the trouble?"

"Yes, but we shot their noses off first."
"What for?"

"So they couldn't get a scent."

"WHERE can I find a policeman?"
"Go to the vegetable market. There you'll see four asleep on one head."

"I MOVED into my new house in the brick row the other day. My neighbor was very cordial. He had recently moved in, too, and had a lot of new appliances. He said I could come over any time and see anything he had. Had a new lawnmower; said I could use that; had a new patent wash-tub; said I could use that."

"A week ago I met him and remarked that I noticed he had a new wife. 'Yes,' he replied, 'come over and take supper with us to-night.'" FELIX ADLER.

"ONE thing I don't like about McGinnis. Every time he sees me he reaches over and slaps me on the chest, right where I keep a vest pocket full of cigars. But next time I'll fix him."

"What are you going to do to McGinnis?"
"I'm going to put a couple of sticks of dynamite in my pocket."

WAITRESS—Shall I bring you a demitasse?
Patron—No; the old woman might complain and see her. FRANK FOGARTY.

JUDGE—How long are you in America?
Prisoner—So, please Your Worship. Just five feet eight inches.

Judge—Ninety days!

"I'M WILLIAMS, you are charged with felonious assault. How old are you?"

"My name is James Fairfax Montague Williams, sir. Ah, twenty-five years old, sir."

"You'll be twenty-five when you get out. Next!"

JUDGE. Ah, want you to arrest that old man now? Thursday for murderously assaulting me."

"And why wait until Thursday?"
"He won't be out of the hospital before then." WALTER C. KELLEY.

"WHAT makes you think I'm sorry?"
"All your friends call you Colonel." CAMERON AND GAYLORD.

"WHAT makes you so small?"
"I was brought up on short cake and condensed milk." DUNN AND MURRAY.

"HEARD of a new stunt to-day."
"What is it?"

"A bald-headed man painted a rabbit on his head so he'd have a little hair." BARRY AND WOLFORD.

"For instance?"
"I once knew an old man who had only two teeth, and he used to thank the Lord they bit."

She—And if you do marry me?

He—Then you'll have to go to work.

"WHY did you run away when you saw that bartender start to do me up?"

"Did you think I wanted to stand there and see a friend of mine licked by a bartender?"

"I WAS terribly crowded at your sister's wedding last week."

"I know; the rooms are pretty small. We even had to use condensed milk." YORKE AND ADAMS.

"HOW many children have you now?"
"I don't know. The boys all left." REED BROTHERS.

"HOW long has your father been dead?"

"Four men, if he had lived until next Tuesday he would have been dead just twenty-one years."

"He was always a good fellow."

"Sure, he was in heaven three weeks before Satan knew he was dead." CALLAHAN AND ST. GEORGE.

"WHAT are your politics?"
"I'm a Democrat."

"But what would you be if you weren't a Democrat?"
"I'd be ashamed of myself."

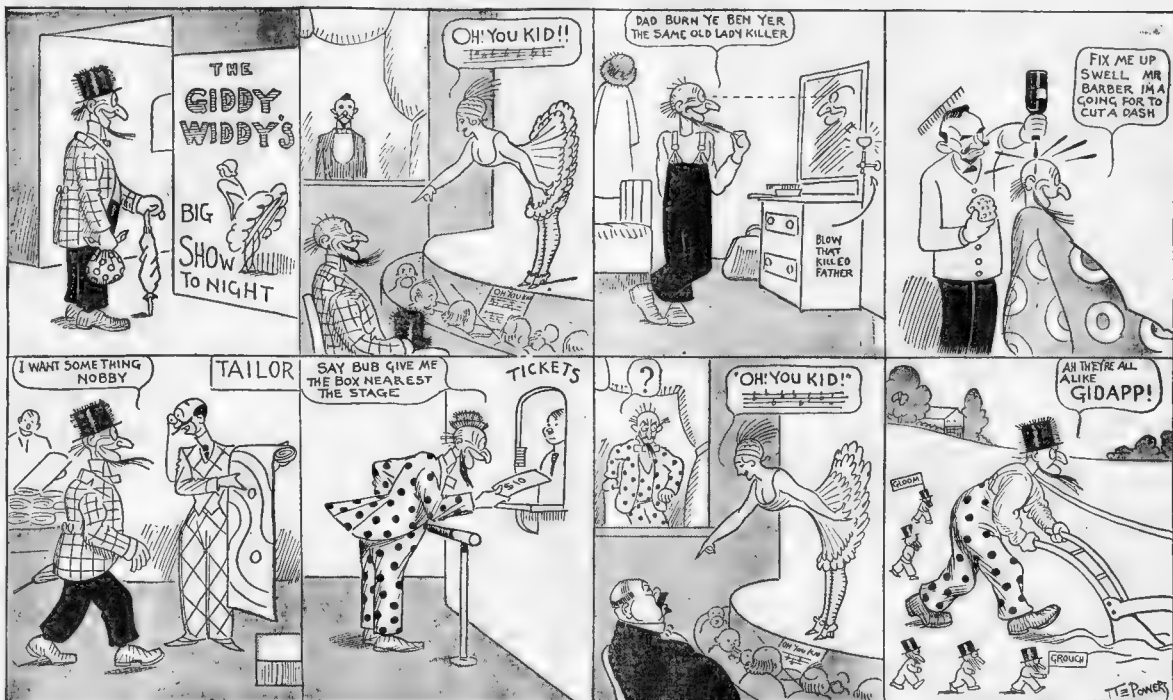

"WHERE were you on all day yesterday?"
"Did you catch anything?"

CHAPTER XVII.
GREECE OUT OF THE FRYING PAN INTO THE FIRE.

BUT Greece had other troubles aside from Ceres, the food gran, Bacchante, the undressed kid, and Diana, the virgin huntress.

Greece fought as hard for her independence as a bunch of women would fight over 25 cent gloves at a sacrifice sale. The Persians, the Romans and the Turks all took a wallop out of Greece until finally the powers had to intervene and hand her a king from a foreign country.

The Greeks had many unusual customs. For instance, when guests arrived the host would kiss their lips, hands and knees. It was apparently there were—those were the—, but after several trials it seems best to let this go without comment.

At feasts the Greeks used to lie on beds and eat. They had a lot of sense in those days. How much better it is to feast and drink in that manner than to try to get up from the table and have a couple of waiters carry one off!

First Philip of Macedonia conquered the Greeks. He was assassinated and his son Alexander, then only twenty years old, had to wallopp the Greeks again. Alexander was called the "Great" and he was the classiest ruler of those times. He became famous for broncho busting, riding that famous horse "Bucephalus." How any horse could travel burdened with such a name is a puzzle.

He was the original "Smart Alec" and he got away with it without being murdered, dying happily at a banquet table with a wine cup in his hand. He was always regretted that history has never made it clear how many quarts Alexander pushed on that occasion.

After Alexander the Great died the Gauls invaded Greece and messed things up horrible. Next King Agis was executed and King Nabis originated the bandage game by means of a dummy dressed to look like the queen. This was made of machinery and filled with hidden spikes—when the figure hugged the visitors they were glad to give up all the money they possessed. But the glory of Greece is gone. Five Greeks of today couldn't read the Hittite to save their lives, and the girls have to come to America to learn Greek dances.

CHAPTER XVIII.
ROME.

MORE than twenty-five hundred years ago, or about the time horses were relegated to New York, Romans stepped into the limelight with a band of three thousand Cameratti known as banditti.

They camped on the River Tiber, about sixteen miles from the sea, and built a city. Romulus built a wall about it, but his brother Remus laughed at it, whereupon Romulus slapped Remus in the neck with a bronze sword and Remus never spoke to him again. Romulus was getting along fine with his three thousand banditti, there was no trouble, they were getting three squares every day and on time, but man never knows when he will off, except on rare occasions when he hears a decree read and they were not satisfied.

What do you think the mutts said?
They said: "We have no women. We want some women."

And so they stole a lot of Sabine women. The Sabines were pained and were going to fight, but the women evidently enjoyed being kidnapped, for they begged their own people, the Sabines, not to fight the Romans.

And so Rome, the great, was founded by a bunch of robbers and a lot of kidnapped women who enjoyed being kidnapped.

Romulus reigned for thirty-seven years and then disappeared. History does not give her name.

Later came the battle between the Romans and the Albans. This was settled by a fight between three brothers named Horatius, of the Romans, and three brothers named Curatius, of the Albans. The Horatii defeated the Curatii, and from that time until a few years ago no society in history was as famous. Of course, the Horatius Society that flourished a few years ago puts the Horatii and the Curatii away back in the gloom, for members of the original Horatius Society are legion, and their path of destruction seems to be ever sweeping on.

After this there came a long bunch of kings, some of whom died peacefully, others by request and many in battle. Then came Brennus, called a Gaul, but in reality an Irishman from France. He made a lot of trouble for Rome because none of the officials of that city had the presence of mind to put him on the police force.

Then came Hannibal, who crossed the Alps. But he crossed the "great divide" a little later in much less time. Scipio burned Carthage and ended the Punic wars. For this they gave Scipio a laurel wreath and a house. He did not give the house away.

They had a delightful habit of permitting each victor to kill all his enemies. They are not so humane to-day. When a man wants to get rid of an enemy he bankrupts him in the financial market, gets some one to name him as a co-defendant and otherwise puts him on the eternal blink.

It was not long after this before Rome began to get interesting through the appearance of a couple of very busy generals named Bill Pompey and J. Caesar. Poor Pompey had a hard time of it, even his "pillar" was made of stone.

Both were so powerful they thought they would shake for the odd, or, in other words, fight it out and see who would be the real ruler. Pompey had the classiest army, when it came to look, as it included a multitude of the nobility of Rome, all handsome young men.

Caesar had an army of battle and bottle-carried veterans.

With great forethought Caesar gave the order, "Smash 'em in the face."

It was their weak point. They were handsome young men and handsome young men are generally weak in the face. When they found Caesar's men were spilling their good looks they fled and Caesar was victorious.

WHAT ONE GRAFTER HAD LEARNED—

Read These Strong Lines from David Belasco's Great Success "The Woman," by Wm. C. de Mille, . . .

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved

THE reformer is a grafter out of a job, and philanthropy is the bandage over the eyes of justice.

THERE are two kinds of grafters—one of them thinks he's committing a crime, and consequently he's a criminal; the other knows that graft in this country is a national institution. The grafter is a necessary public position and should be filled by an honest man. That fellow gets rich.

THERE'S only one crowd that allows grafting to go on—and that's the bunch of long-eared sheep you call "the public." Ha! The American people! The race with more money and brains than any other nation on the face of the earth; allowing themselves to be milked year after year, howling bloody murder that they're being robbed and sweeping the ground with their hats when one of the robbers passes 'em on the street. I tell you, it's all a bluff!

Grafter! Why, my boy, I love it.

There's no honor the country has to give that isn't showered on the successful grafter. Not on the piker, mind you, but on the big one—the man who plays for millions a throw. One of them comes back from abroad and the intelligent American people yells itself hoarse saying: "Welcome to what you've left of our city." The people elect a President to fight the grafters, and the minute he gets busy he nearly loses his job.

Yes, sir, it's the people that want graft and support it. If they wouldn't stand for it; if they'd get up and vote against it, it wouldn't last two minutes. But they all want a piece of the cake themselves, and everybody grafts. There's no country in the world where it flourishes as it does here, and it's because the public don't think a man's worth anything at all unless he can sell 'em a gold brick. Oh, don't talk about the public to me. They made me rich, but they certainly give me a pain.

Grafting is not a failing with me; it's a religion. You see, I am a utilitarian.

THE people are responsible for the political machine, just as they are responsible for the car of Juggernaut. The car of Juggernaut is pulled along by the people themselves, and in this country the ropes are votes. Every now and then some poor devil of a fanatic-looking fellow goes out to Heaven—throws himself in front of it and is squashed. But the poor old Juggernaut can't help it. He isn't pushing the car. He's only riding in it, and no two or three men could move it. So when I see the whole fool population tugging at the ropes I'd rather climb into the car and get a free ride than make my mark in the world face down—under the wheels.

THE public will wake up some day—it's apt to wake up any minute—and that's why I want to get mine first. Once I've got enough for myself—like my friend Andrew—I'll be quite willing to take the duty off steel.

Pompey lost his head entirely. They brought it to Caesar in a basket.

Caesar was a great ruler, but ambitious. He wanted to be king. He gave great feasts and was decidedly popular, but he made the fatal mistake of putting faith in his friends. One day they cut him dead in the Senate.

In fact, he received twenty-three cuts. "Twenty-three for him," said Brutus, when the stab wounds were counted.

CHAPTER XIX.
SOME EMPERORS AND EMPERETTES.

AFTER the assassination of Julius Caesar came the triumvirate, or three rulers. These were Marc Antony, Lepidus and Octavius, afterward Augustus Caesar.

Lepidus was soon banished and then Antony and Octavius fought it out, but Antony had met Cleopatra and as his mind was not on his fighting and he was defeated. He then killed himself. From the pictures we have of Cleopatra it is evident Antony's mind was pretty well occupied.

After Augustus Caesar came Tiberius. He looked like a "before-using" hair-tonic advertisement, and one day he quipped himself. Caligula succeeded him, but his wife was the real cheese in those parts, with a great fondness for gladiators. It is indeed shameful the way these army officers hypnotize our fair ladies with a few brass buttons and a bit of gilt braid.

Then, after Caligula had been killed, Claudius was made emperor. He was an idiot, and the people thought it would be safer to be ruled by an idiot. It might have been, but they did not reckon with his wife. She poisoned Claudius and certainly made Rome one of the liveliest burgs on record for a while.

Then came Nero. He murdered his wife, but became discomfited after that, and was forced to burn Rome. "My wife made it hot enough for me," he exclaimed, "but now that she is dead I have got to burn the city to make it hot enough."

Galba, Otho, Vitellius, all ruled for a while and they were killed for the general good.

There were other emperors, but as they never had any fun no one got jealous enough of them to murder them.

They conducted some interesting rites or religious ceremonies in those days, but our present post office regulations will not permit of a detailed account. At their banquets they served peacock's brains, flaming birds' tongues, parrot's heads and similar junk. They had quantities of wines, and their dining rooms were lighted by means of scented oils. The rooms were draped in silks, and slaves brought in the foods and served them to the Romans who were reclining upon couches covered with silks and furs.

Do you think the ancient Roman would stand for a second the anarchy of our present waiters? Not for a quarter of a second. Mr. Walter would be peeping out of a basket wondering what the body was doing away over there on the other side of the room. The young men had to be urged to marry, and freed heavily if they did not. Rome was at the height of its power then, but poor Rome fell, as any country must ultimately fall where the booze index that marriage be compulsory.

Mothering the Sick Pearls of the Louvre

Mlle Cortola Valencia, the beauty whose beneficent influence upon pearls makes her a possible winner as Gem Nurse.

Valencia, by the way, was particularly admired by Lord Camrose, now about to wed an American heiress, as the greatest beauty of Paris.

The experts explain that the temperament of the wearer shows its effect upon the pearls, and that the warm, impulsive nature of Cortola Valencia would add much color to their lustre.

The question of entrusting this possibly very valuable piece of government property to a private person is a very embarrassing one. In certain aspects it is also a very delicate one. The highly personal treatment of the pearls would require the chosen nurse to wear them night and day next to her skin until they showed a restoration of their lost beauty and lustre. They would remain in the keeping of a private citizen for an indefinite period. Now, an actress usually finds herself at times in very mixed and hilarious company, and it is doubted whether the pearls could be safe under these circumstances. Would she be allowed to stay out late to supper with them? In order to safe-guard them it would probably be necessary to appoint some high official to watch them closely.

Many of the officials of the Louvre maintain that it would be quite illegal to entrust the pearls to an outsider, and they offer the amusing suggestion that the precious gems should be hung around the neck of one of the guardians of the museum. The experts, however, have pointed out that not one of these persons possesses the necessary delicacy of skin.

THE PEARL NECKLACE OF Mlle DE THIERS WHICH HAS GROWN STARKED AND YELLOW FOR WANT OF MOTHERING

Paris, October 1
THE famous necklace of pearls left by Mme. Thiers to the Louvre is at the point of being ruined through the lack of a sympathetic wearer of the fair sex. When the necklace was presented to the nation by the widow of this great French statesman Thiers it was worth a quarter of a million dollars. It was made up of one hundred and fifty of the finest pearls ever found in the sea. To-day it is almost valueless.

A pearl depends for its beauty and lustre upon constant contact with the human body. This body must be of the sympathetic kind, for there are some women who beautify pearls continually, and there are others who tarnish them hopelessly.

The Thiers pearls have simply gone to ruin through cold neglect. They are dull, dirty looking, uglier than imitation pearls or even glass beads.

The problem of saving this valuable piece of property for the government has evidently become a serious one. The chief gem experts of the city have been consulted. They have reported that the only possible remedy is to let the pearls be worn by some one, and they have indicated a number of beautiful women whose constitution is known to be favorable to pearls.

But the will of Mme. Thiers provided that the necklace should never be taken from the Louvre. The Government is now searching for some way of evading this explicit direction. It may ask the courts to decide that a departure from the testator's will is permissible when it is absolutely necessary to save the object bequeathed. Certainly it would be proper to remove the pearls from the Louvre in case of fire. Is not the present case one of equal emergency?

It appears that the pearl benefits by contact with the warm, delicate skin of a woman of fine vitality. Being worn around the neck, they have the best opportunity of imbibing warmth and sustenance.

The contest for the privilege of mothering the pearls has now narrowed down to two persons—Cortola Valencia, the lovely little Spanish dancer, and Mlle. Greuze, who reincarnates the type of beauty seen in eighteenth century French art.

Mlle GREUZE, THE BEAUTY WHOSE SKIN AND TEMPERAMENT MAKE HER AN IDEAL PEARL MOTHER AND WHO MAY WIN THE NURSING OF THE NECKLACE.

Twist Muffs and High Hats

A Charming House-Gown with Long Graceful Lines. Adapted to a Subtle Blending of Colors.

Worn with the New Winter Costumes They

Supply a Novel and Fascinating Touch

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion. Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

WHY should a muff remain a plain, soft cylinder of fur while every other accessory of the winter costume is designed to please the eye, as well as for utility? The flat muff, and muffs of satin and ribbons, fur-lined, were improvements—and now I am submitting as a further concession to the artistic who might be called the "twist muff."

The illustration shows how its pleated construction of fur-lined satin bound about with silk cord makes it a graceful addition to the costume whether actually worn as a hand warmer or carried on one arm.

Shown with the same costume is a new hat, very high, and with its large, drooping plume having the appearance of a bush. Like the twist muff, it is a strikingly pleasing addition to the winter costume.

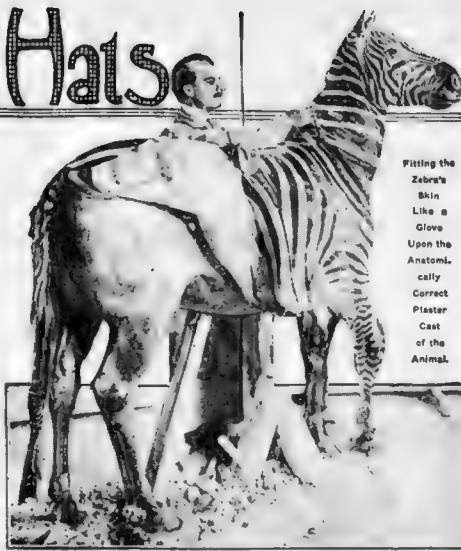

That the tailor-made costume portrayed for you here is something quite new is at once proclaimed by—for example—the narrow curves of the skirt from the double breast-banded tunic effect at the sides, and the belting of the coat to get a very high waist line.

So it only remains for you to imagine, as the material, a black cheviot striped with rather bright stripes, and well to note the exact position of the military braid which figures so prominently on both coat and skirt, while you must not undervalue, either, the decorative importance of that aforementioned belt as contrasted with the patterned leather and white knickerbockers, the contrasting leathers being joined together in the bands of many little gold buttons, strengthened by a piping of green cloth and a line of gold cord.

The other gown shown here achieves its effect, and success, by its subtle blending of colors, and its long, graceful lines. The satin charmeuse is shot with mysterious mauve, deep blue and purple, to each of whose soft tones an equal prominence is given by the arrangement of the skirt draperies.

Black chiffon, too, is utilized for the fashioning of the right side of the corsage, where its filmy folds are edged narrowly, first with flame color and then with vivid sapphire blue, beyond which again there comes just a glimmer of gold, while swathed about the waist is a sash whose device of blue and gold is wrought on a background of bronze brown, one end of this warm-hued silk being tasselled with ornaments which bring together each and every one of the colors of the gown. And as the skirt draperies fall apart with every movement they show inner secrets and treasures of color—deep midnight blue shadowed by a cheery black chiffon and the gleaming gold and blue of the tissue underneath.

Fitting the Zebra's Skin Like a Glove Upon the Anatomy, Correctly Cast of the Animal.

How the Imperishable Concrete Body of the Zoo Animal of the Future Is Made.

"Fixing" Our Wild Animals for the Zoos of 2000 A. D.

The Zebra Poses for the Statuette. The First Stage in the Preservation of Wild Animal Types for the Museums.

"Caliph"—the Preserved Hippo, in Life Long an Attraction at the Central Park, New York Zoo. His Hide, Covering a Plaster Body, Is Now Used as an Educational Figure—One of the Forerunners of the Inhabitants of the Future Zoo When All Wild Animals Will Have Been Wiped Out by the Progress of Civilization.

WHAT will the zoos and menageries have to offer the public when all the wild animals—the elephant, lion, tiger, bipotomus, zebra, giraffe—become extinct? For that is bound to happen, so naturalists agree, at the rate they are being killed off by hunters for pleasure and for profit.

These animals cannot be bred successfully in captivity, and it is estimated that another hundred years, or less, will see the last of them. Are our great-grandchildren to know about them from books and pictures?

Fortunately, this threatened deprivation has been foreseen, and there is an interesting new handicraft which is already preparing to stock the zoos of 2000 A. D. with specimens as nearly lifelike as human ingenuity can make them. Externally—skin, hair, bones and tusks—they will be the real thing; the rest will be plaster, modeled from life. The specimens already shown are very much more realistic than those turned out in the ordinary way by the taxidermist, besides being virtually indestructible.

Instead of depending upon photographs, which invariably prove unsatisfactory, giving false perspectives and distorted shapes, the idea is to work direct from life.

With the intelligent and skilled sculptor posing only within a few feet, the sculptor is able to incorporate into his model the minutest detail of proportion, the characteristic, natural pose, and particularly to catch all the delicate gradations of muscular anatomy which are disappearing traits so full of the real charm of the finished mounted figure.

In the case of the zebra of the top of 2000 A. D., with the hind bones, the skull and the pelvis put into position on a temporary framework the wet clay is applied and the anatomy and form of the zebra is gradually worked up to the finished state. Each figure is modeled, of course, as the animal will be without the skin. This takes its place finally on a mannikin cast.

The skin is temporarily tried on at intervals, and the figure can be immediately altered at those points where improvements are thought necessary. From the finished, sculptured form, a plaster mould is obtained from which a thin mannikin cast is made, having a lining of burlap introduced, to combine strength and durability with a minimum of weight.

On becoming dry this is given several coats of tannine to make it waterproof, when the skin is permanently fitted on. The finished mannikin weighs a little over 100 pounds.

One of the most commanding of African mannikins just mounted is Caliph—the bipotomus which for thirty years was the leading attraction in Central Park menagerie,

New York. It was twelve feet long, fourteen feet in circumference and weighed four tons when alive. Owing to the great bulk of the bipotomus and the peculiar difference of texture of the skin of a water-living animal, it required a different scheme to adjust the skin.

The working of the huge skin into the many folds and wrinkles, especially around the massive head, neck and legs, which are so marvelously brought out in the mannikin, was a most difficult task. The great skin weighed 1,200 pounds when first removed from the body, and in some parts was six to eight inches thick. The skin was shaved down to only sixty-eight pounds for final use. This required the service of six men for four days. The skin contained 100 square feet of surface and was from one-quarter to one-half inch in thickness when ready for its final place on the mannikin.

The accompanying photograph indicates how Caliph will look in the zoo of 2000 A. D. surrounded by school children—lifelike, but no longer to be feared.

An Original New Winter Costume with High-Belied Coat—Showing Also the "Twist Muff" and High Plumed Hat. Both Photographs Are from Exclusive "Lucile" Models.

A Pawn Shop For—Animals!

Where Trained Elephants Are Laid On the Counter for a Loan, and Snakes, Lions,
Camels—Even Fleas—Are Good for a Ticket

"The animals come in two by two, and stay till their owners pay what's due."

opening doors and letting himself out. The dog let himself out and me in at one and the same time. Most of the animals that come to me are trained animals and while they are with me I have to keep them in practice. I had a couple of vaudeville acts a few months ago. I loaned fifty dollars on them. The first stunt in vaudeville was to juggle rubber balls. They are very intelligent animals. I think they must have realized that they were "in hock," for from the time they came in the only trick I could get them to perform with the balls was to arrange them two on top and one underneath, like a pawnbroker's sign—in reference, no doubt, to their temporary bondage. They used to play for hours at a time in front of my establishment and when their owner came to redeem them he refused to pay for their keep, claiming that I had used his snails to attract business and I ought to pay him for the advertisement!

"I had a lion in here last week that caused a little excitement. A couple of green hands working here forgot to feed him at the right time and he commenced to get fussy. His chain broke and he was loose in the stable. As a matter of fact, the lion was a decrepit beast that had served his time in a side-show. One had to handle him with gloved hands for fear of scaring him. But the way those two greenhorns moved around the stable was a caution. Finally one of them remembered the saying that if you treat an animal well the victory is yours. They tried it and the animal reined with pain. Believing that their end had come, the two men ran terror-stricken out of the place. They can have their hats and coats any time they come back for them.

"Some of the animals have a certain pride and seem to resent it when I make but a small loan on them."

"Goats are poor risks. They are apt to eat up their pass tickets and we have all kinds of trouble trying to identify them when they are called for. Sometimes, too, they eat up the tickets on the other animals."

"Of course, I am responsible for the condition of the animals which are left in my charge. Although I don't charge anything extra for insurance against damage by moths etc., like other establishments do, some of my customers complain if their animals show arid areas on their hides when I return them. I had a llama here, and when its owner came to redeem it he objected to paying what was due because portions of the animal's skin were missing the fur.

"It is a very risky business. If I didn't know animals from A to Z I would be bankrupt in a month. As it is, however, the animal owner has to get up early to learn me anything about the business, and they don't often find me napping."

"We'll All Dress Like Men Soon," Says Painter Louise Abbema

MADAME LOUISE ABBEMA, Knight of the Legion of Honor, the most distinguished woman artist in France, noted as a painter of portraits and of flowers, has taken to wearing masculine attire and she explains why she thinks all women should wear it.

By Mademoiselle Louise Abbema, The Noted Parisian Artist.

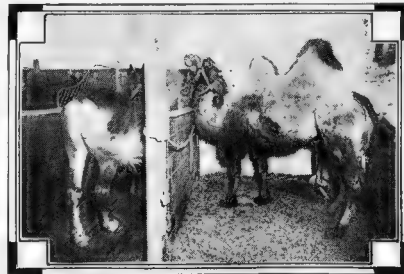

I HAVE come to the conclusion that every woman who wants to hold her own in the world must dress like a man. As an artist I used to believe that women's dress was beautiful and admirable on artistic grounds, but experience has taught me that the practical advantages of masculine dress outweigh all aesthetic dreams. I say to my sisters: "Cut your hair short and dress as much like a man as you can!" When a man sees a woman dressed in fluffy, pretty garments he says: "Pretty creature, she knows nothing of business. I can get the best of her." When he sees her dressed in masculine attire he says: "She means business. I must try no nonsense with her."

Most of us women are here to make a living, to succeed in one calling or another. Man's clothing helps us to make that living. Even to the house-keeping woman it is an advantage.

Man's clothing, or such an adaptation of it as a woman may now wear, is strong, durable, clean, healthy, and economical. Woman's conventional dress is weak, flimsy, grimy-catching, uncleanly, and costly. You can wear a cloth tailor-made suit for two years, have it pressed occasionally and it looks well. Wear a pretty dress for two weeks and it begins to look shabby.

I wear a cloth coat and waistcoat cut just like a man's and a perfectly plain cloth skirt clearing the ground. That is as far as I dare to go. Some day we shall wear trousers and then our emancipation will be complete.

A Camel and a Trained Pony Side by Side in the Animal Pawn Shop.

WHAT is probably the only animal "hot shop" in the world has been conducted in New York for the last few years and yet its existence is known to but a few of the most fortunate unfortunates.

When funds are low and tattered Pitt is at his mistress's feet, he asserts: "All the animal empire consisted by Dr. V. J. Potter, whose analysis for all kinds are taken in, should be put in a square man. There is no way out. Faithful Pitt and his mistress must be arrested."

To one, who knows, however, how ready the dog is to be deceived, he asserts: "All the animal empire consisted by Dr. V. J. Potter, whose analysis for all kinds are taken in, should be put in a square man. There is no way out. Faithful Pitt and his mistress must be arrested."

That is why I like to loan on camels," commented Dr. Potter, who is the trainer of the Hippo from animals and calls every animal in the universe by its first name. "Camels can go for nine days without a drink, you know, and water rest in a stable is no small item."

"I have to be most careful, too, not to be imposed upon. With all my caution, however, sometimes they get the best of me. Not long ago I loaned a fellow twenty dollars on a dog. The animal was worth fifty dollars at the outside. I didn't see how I could possibly lose out by taking the dog, and I wouldn't have, either, if I had kept it. But this was a trick dog, and the swindler did not tell me that one of that dog's best tricks was Mlle. Louise Abbema in the Clothes She Recommends to Every Woman.

OVER a million workmen are killed or maimed in the course of their work every year in this country. What provision have we made for the families of those who are thus stricken down?

This problem has never been satisfactorily settled in this country. From time to time within the past twenty-five years commissions have been appointed by various States and by the Federal Government to frame adequate legislation, but nothing definite has been accomplished. Laws designed to cover the situation have been passed by State legislatures, but have been declared unconstitutional by the courts.

In no State of the Union today can a workman be sure that if he is killed or hurt in the course of his work his family will be compensated by his employer or the State. In most cases, indeed, he may be tolerably sure that in such a contingency those dependent upon him will have to look elsewhere for relief.

Even in cases where the employer is held liable there is no certainty at all as to the amount of compensation the injured workman or his survivors will receive. It depends entirely upon that most uncertain of Anglo-Saxon institutions—the petty jury. For the loss of a leg a jury today may award a workman five thousand dollars. Tomorrow another workman in the same community and doing the same class of work at the same wages may be awarded only five hundred dollars for a similar injury.

Kath Smith, the widow of John Smith, a bricklayer, thirty-five years old, who was killed in the course of his work, receives $1,000 from one jury, while Bridget McKane, the widow of Patrick McKane, thirty-six years old, another bricklayer, who was also killed in the course of his work, receives $10,000 from another jury under precisely similar circumstances.

Of course accident insurance offers a solution of the problem for those who can afford to pay for it. Indeed, many famous artists insure themselves in this way. Thus Paul Brecht insures his arms for $100,000, and Alfred Herford and arms for $50,000. Kubelik, his arms for $100,000, and Miss Claire Lynch, her neck and eyes for $100,000. Humble workmen, however, are obviously denied this costly protection.

They do these things differently and better in Europe. Every nation there is far in advance of the United States in that respect. In great European countries a system of workmen's insurance, paid for by the employer and administered by the government, prevails, and every laboring man realizes that if he is stricken down while at work his family, at any rate, will be amply provided for.

In France the system has been developed to a wonderful state of efficiency. The French law has been in force for twelve years, and has been found to work admirably. Every employer is charged a certain percentage of the wages he pays—a fifth of 1 per cent—and the fund so created is paid out in a most systematic manner to the employees who are injured or to the survivors of those who are killed.

Within the past twelve years over two million workmen or their survivors have been thus provided for. Such a large number of cases has naturally enabled the authorities to make some valuable deductions and to estimate with a considerable degree of accuracy the relative value of human members and faculties.

In case of death the wife or husband has a right to an annual income equal to 20 per cent of the salary previously earned. For orphaned children the proportion is proportionate to their age and the seriousness of the loss suffered.

The amputation of both legs or their paralysis is equivalent to depriving him of all power to work. The same is true if both arms are lost, although this case has not occurred yet.

The loss of the right arm or merely the right hand takes from the workman 50 per cent of his working power. The same calculation would apply to the left arm or hand if the victim happens to be left-handed.

The loss of the left arm or hand varies very much, according to the occupation of the injured. The expert forms an average based on various industries, given for this injury at 50 per cent of the working value of the man. One leg represents about 70 per cent of the working value of his own; one foot 60 per cent.

The man who is injured so that he cannot move without crutches loses 85 per cent of his value. He who is attacked with partial paralysis of his face, accompanied by serious trouble, loses 91 per cent of his value.

temple. In more recent times (1847) the enlightened Sultan Abdul Medjid undertook the reparation of the damage done by time and earthquake.

Last year the Ottoman Government engaged the well-known Italian architect, Signor Maroncelli, who had restored the Campanile on the Piazza St. Marco in Venice, to investigate St. Sophia's dome and submit a detailed account of necessary repairs. Signor Maroncelli estimated the cost of these repairs at about $500,000. The Ottoman Government considered this was too high a sum to be spent on an object that is, after all, of no paramount national interest to the Moslems themselves, since the edifice is, of course, a Christian house of worship.

Accordingly the work necessary to preserve the venerable monument to Christianity will be performed under an international plan.

WHAT YOUR BODY IS WORTH.

How France Has Set an Example to the World by Arbitrarily Fixing the Relative Value of Its Working People's Eyes, Arms, Feet, Legs—All Their Working Machinery.

Vertigo, neurasthenia and neuro-psia trouble caused by accident (verru) from 50 to 60 per cent of a man's value. Deafness in one ear is valued at 40 per cent. Total deafness at 60 per cent.

Marked decrease of sharpness of sight in both eyes destroys 55 per cent of a man's value, the loss of one eye 33-1/3 per cent, and the loss of two eyes 100 per cent. Two nostrils destroyed are calculated at 4 per cent and one nostril only at 2 per cent. Two or more vertebrae joined together and made stiff and immovable are calculated at 50 per cent, inability to move the right shoulder 50 per cent, putting the right shoulder out of joint 10 per cent and breaking the collar bone 10 per cent.

It is here figures it is evident that if a whole workman is valued at $18,000, as the French courts have held in the case of the average workman, his right arm is worth $14,250, his left arm $5,000, one of his left legs $12,500, one of his feet $10,500, one of his ears, including the hearing faculty, $1,500. An eye is worth $5,000, but two of them are worth $15,000, or as much as the whole man. A nostril costs $250, a shoulder $1,800, and a collar bone $1,200. The right thumb is worth $3,500, and the left $2,700, while the right index finger is worth $2,700, and the left is worth $2,150.

Some singular deductions follow from this arithmetic. A man is worth two left arms, or two eyes. Two eyes are calculated at the same value as three separate arms. A left thumb is worth a right index finger. It is the belief that no workman can make more earnings in a year at the day than at the end of the week than he begins.

In France the Value of an Average Workingman's Life is Put at $18,000. How his various Members are Valued is Shown in the Accompanying Diagram. Thus Both Eyes Are Seen to Be Worth as Much as a Man's Working Life. What One Eye is Worth Only One-Third. The Value of the Various Members is Set Forth in American Money.

ing, in short, at times when men are fatigued.

The dimension in the value of a workman based upon the gravity of an injury received is well illustrated by the comparative diagram on this page. Thus we pass from a healthy and robust workman on the left to a workman who is weaker because he has lost one nostril, while No. 3 has lost an ear. No. 4 has suffered a dislocation of the shoulder. No. 5 has lost the left index finger, No. 6 the right index finger, No. 7 the left thumb, No. 8 the right thumb, No. 9 one eye, No. 10 an arm, No. 11 a foot, No. 12 a leg, No. 13 a right arm.

In France it is inadvisable to which side the blame lies. The employer is responsible for all accidents without any regard to the circumstances of the case, and can be no collector of suits. At this point (as long as the accident takes place during working hours) a share of work or in the case of work required by the employer, the victim is entitled to a share of the injury purposely assumed by an employer, of course, gives no right of compensation.

This system is undoubtedly a benefit to the employee, but it is still advantageous to the employer. I cause he fears an unexpected accident and knows exactly what he is to pay.

$500,000 to Save a Church Dome Fifteen Centuries Old

THE oldest of the world's architectural marvels—the Byzantine dome of St. Sophia's, in Constantinople—is threatening to collapse beneath the weight of its fifteen centuries of existence. At this moment a commission of French, Italian and Turkish experts are considering means of preventing such a disaster, which would be lamented not only by every traveler in the East, but by Christians and Moslems alike.

Not only the centuries but humidity, earthquakes, conflagrations, bombardments, have each and all contributed their share of damage, undermining slowly but surely the strength and solidity of a proud memorial of Hellenic inspiration and Hellenic achievement.

The Emperor John VI Palaeologus in the fourteenth century did much to preserve the temple. In more recent times (1847) the enlightened Sultan Abdul Medjid undertook the reparation of the damage done by time and earthquake.

Last year the Ottoman Government engaged the well-known Italian architect, Signor Maroncelli, who had restored the Campanile on the Piazza St. Marco in Venice, to investigate St. Sophia's dome and submit a detailed account of necessary repairs. Signor Maroncelli estimated the cost of these repairs at about $500,000. Accordingly the work necessary to preserve the venerable monument to Christianity will be performed under an international plan.

THE FINE ART OF FRENCH COOKING No. 3

Delicious Soups That Can Be Made from Shrimps and Crawfish Described by Escoffier, the Greatest French Cook.

MONSIEUR ESCOFFIER, the world's most famous chef, who cooked the best dinner the Kaiser Wilhelm ever ate, today continues the appetizing series of articles he is writing for this newspaper. In this article he deals with a favorite Parisian delicacy, soups made from crawfish, which are a novelty to American readers.

By A. Escoffier.

ONE of the favorite culinary delicacies of France is the ecrevisse or crawfish. It is prepared in many ways, but its blindest mission is to furnish the basis of that delicious soup, "bisque of ecrevisses," or "bisque of crawfish."

The Shrimp.

It is highly probable that this dish, whether called "ecrevisse" or "crawfish," is unfamiliar to many of my American readers. I feel I shall be doing them a service by familiarizing them with this subject. No one can discuss French cookery at length without referring to "ecrevisses" from time to time.

The ecrevisse or French crawfish is a small crustacean, in form like a lobster, and taking a bright red color when cooked like its larger cousin. I am informed that the crawfish is abundant along the Atlantic coast of the United States. It is possible that as the American crawfish is so much less used than the French, it is inferior to the French in flavor, but I am by no means certain of that. Probably if the virtues of bisque of crawfish were thoroughly understood it would become as popular in America as in France.

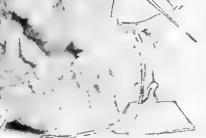

I will first give a recipe for the most delightful kind of bisque of crawfish adapted to the resources of private households. I must warn my readers, however, that this is a difficult dish to execute in an ordinary kitchen, and I can hardly recommend anybody who is not an expert cook to try it, unless she is prepared to run the risk of wasting considerable valuable material. However, many of my readers must be familiar with the preparation of bisque of lobster, and they are in some degree initiated into the mysteries of this soup.

Bisque of Ecrevisses or Crawfish (also called Bisque of Ecrevisses Soup).—In the first place it is absolutely indispensable to possess among one's kitchen utensils a little mortar, or a little machine to crush meat for sausage stuffing. This machine, in my opinion, should be provided in even the simplest domestic kitchen for other purposes as well as this one.

This will provide soup for five or six persons.

Take twenty to twenty-five moderate-sized crawfish, an onion of about two ounces, a carrot of the same weight, a little leaf of bay, some stalks of parsley, a small glass of cognac and a large glass of white wine.

The Crawfish in its Sand Tower.

Cut the onion and the carrot in little squares, brown them slightly in butter, in a saucepan (casserole). Add the thyme, bay, parsley, a third of an ounce of salt, a pinch of pepper ground in the mill and a tiny pinch of red pepper.

Saute the crawfish for several minutes. As soon as they are red moisten them with cognac and white wine. Cover the saucepan, cook at a sharp fire for ten minutes. Remove the crawfish from the saucepan. Shell the tails and put the meat of the tails in a little covered sauce pan.

Pound in the mortar or chop in the meat machine the meat of the crawfish. As soon as they have been reduced to a paste mix in about three and a half ounces of fresh butter. Pound again for several minutes, or pass through the machine, in order to mix the butter well in.

Add to the cooking liquid of the crawfish about six pints of good white bouillon. Boil it for several minutes. Combine this liquid with four soup-spoonfuls of cream of rice diluted with cold bouillon. Let it cook gently for ten minutes. Add the crawfish reduced to a paste, let them boil a few minutes at the side of the fire. Pass this mass with pressure through a strainer into a saucepan; keep it warm.

At the moment of serving season the soup according to taste, and finish it with about two ounces of fine butter. Pass the soup again through the strainer, add the crawfish tails which have been kept in reserve and serve boiling hot.

I have omitted here the addition of mushrooms—little forementioned balls—and also used it as a vegetable stuffing, which are greatly added in great kitchens, but which are certainly not essential to the flavor of the dish. These garnishes only complicate the preparation of the dish in a simple house.

There is another excellent method of preparing bisque of crawfish. In older French cooking it was customary to mix the soup with bread, and I am convinced this method has many advantages.

To prepare bisque of crawfish in this way cut some slices of white bread, crust included, weighing about eight ounces. Place it in a saucepan with half a pint of white bouillon, or, if it is inconvenient to provide this, simply hot water and a little salt. Boil it fifteen minutes to obtain a panada (bread paste). At this moment the crawfish in their recipe may be replaced by shrimp or lobster. If lobster, cut it in small pieces and cook in the same manner as the crawfish. The meat should be cut in small squares.

I give as an example on this page a menu of a delightful luncheon in which bisque of crawfish appears.

In this menu there is an especially light dessert which will be novel to most of my readers and a great treat to them:

Cherries Adeline Patti—Madame Patti. whom I have the honor of knowing has a marked sympathy for vanilla ice cream. I asked her recently for permission to give the public the benefit of this taste by introducing "Cherries Adeline Patti."

The secret of this recipe, which is really very simple, lies in securing the very finest vanilla ice cream. This must be prepared in the highest style of the art. It must be smooth, fine and creamy, and expensive there must be no economy of eggs and fresh cream.

Serve the ice cream in attractive little glasses and on this foundation place fine cherries with brandy or fine champagne.

How I Rediscovered the Nestorian Stone, the Ancient Monument of the First Christians in China

The Original Nestorian Monument, a Record of Christianity in China 1130 Years Ago, As It Stands Today

Exciting Quest of a Danish Explorer for an Early Christian Relic as Interesting as the Rosetta Stone

FRITZ VON HOLM, M. R. A. S., is now thirty years old and has had a varied career. Having been educated at the Danish Annals as a naval officer, he went to the Far East in 1901, when the Boxer troubles were hardly over, staying there till the Russo-Chinese War was in full swing.

By Fritz von Holm, M. R. A. S.

NOT many days distant by caravan from the northeastern corner of Tibet, and in one of those provinces which people delight in calling "hidden," the province of Szechuan, we find the ancient capital of Sianfu, a city so old that its origin is utterly lost in historical obscurity.

Sianfu has become famous for three reasons. It was the capital of the great Tang Dynasty, which reigned over China for four centuries (A. D. 618-907), witnessing and aiding the first introduction of Christianity. It was the hiding place of the ancient Chinese Nestorian monument of A. D. 781—one of the most precious relics of the history of the Orient, linking up in religious bonds Europe and Asia far earlier than generally thought. And finally Sianfu again became the Chinese capital when, in 1900, the late Empress Dowager Tai An fled thither during the Boxer troubles and remained in exile in Szechuan province for some months.

Nestorius, sometimes called the Great, was Patriarch of Constantinople from 428-431, and he was one of the first "Protestants" the church ever heard of. He denied the divinity of Mary, and said that she should never be called by the Egyptian-Greek name "Mother of God," and he maintained that our Saviour had two distinct personalities—one human, Jesus, and the divine, Christ. There are Nestorians in Asiatic Turkey, India, Persia, and around the Indian Archipelago the one near Madras still flourishes. Nearly by the infancy the Nestorian Church sent out missionaries, who travelled every where and spread knowledge about Christ and the teachings and dogmas of Nestorius.

Some missionaries crossed what is today called Russian and Chinese Turkistan, and, following the trade route north of Tibet, which is older than history, they penetrated into China and through the provinces of Kwantung and Shensi reached Sianfu, where they were kindly received by the native King.

The Emperor Taishang and his successor, who received Nestorianism favorably, and the missionaries from Syria were allowed to preach and erect churches. And in the year 781, or 1120 years ago, they decided to erect a tablet commemorating their arrival and work in China.

The Great East Gate of Sian Fu, "the Hidden City."

The Chinese Houseboat, in Which von Holm Carried the Stone Replica 500 Miles.

They then proceeded to carve and erect, in or near Sianfu, the Chinese Nestorian monument, a slab of stone weighing two tons and standing two feet high. The inscription consists of more than two thousand Chinese and Syriac characters and is surrounded by a Christian cross.

The Holm-Nestorian expedition to Sianfu was organized by me, with mostly American capital, in order to endeavor to obtain for science the ancient Nestorian tablet, or otherwise a perfect replica of it. I succeeded in the latter with some risk, after having spent upwards of a year in the far interior of China, visiting regions where but few white men had been before, and those almost all missionaries. I covered, in native homestead and by caravan, more than 2,500 miles in the interior of north China.

Many thousands of dollars were expended in the quest, which was at best a hazardous thing, with many privations and daily risks for months. Along with my Chinese helpers I was not always equally safe. But eventually, after many adventures which are too long and numerous to relate here, I succeeded in getting to Hankow, on the now flooded Yangtze River, a two-ton replica, ten feet high, of the Nestorian monument.

The most difficult thing in connection with the enterprise was the transporting of this enormous block of stone to the nearest railway station, Chengchow, some 250 miles east from Sianfu.

We had to build a specially constructed cart of beams, drawn by six mules and led by three men, in order to attain this end, and it is worth mentioning that the hundreds of Chinese petty mandarins along the road, it took the replica three months to arrive at the railroad station at Chengchow.

It was at this place that an attempt was made to assassinate me. The Chinese climber I had employed to carry the stone, who had been a well-directed blow and was unsuccessful for several days afterwards. Had this attempt taken place farther in the interior, where I should not have been able to secure the aid of a white doctor, I am afraid that the result would have been different.

A Standard Oil steamer took the two-ton slab with its precious inscription, and myself, on the long trip from Shanghai, across Asia and Europe, to New York. The replica of the Nestorian monument has been placed as a year in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, where it will likely remain until taken to a permanent resting place elsewhere. Possibly in Washington, possibly in London.

CAN THEY BE TRUE!

For Every Heiress Hunter There's a Title Huntress, Says This Baron—and International Marriages Are the Happiest Anyway!

"I know of one girl, recently married to an Italian prince who is said to have brought over a baker's dozen of aristocrats in her wake."

BARON VON DE WITZ, whose opinions on international marriage are printed on this page, is a son of the Grand Chamberlain to the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. After several visits to this country Baron de Witz liked it so well that he resigned his post in the Danish army, married a domestic American girl for love, and came here to live, much to his parents' dismay.

"The Baron, therefore, considers he has a right to speak out with emphasis on his belief that international marriages are usually happy ones."

By Baron Von De Witz

If you can produce a scandalmonger with a tale of consensual bliss and get a newspaper to print three- or four-line mention of it, you are a person quite as extraordinary in your way as the nest-building monkey and entitled to a glass case in the Smithsonian!

He is not the sort of hum-drum chap that she feels she knows by heart the minute he opens his mouth and shows his face."

"They" take it for granted that the title marries the purse not the woman; never is the purse accused of having married the title, not the man.

It was never yet even hinted that the American girl who is not in the habit of sticking demurely in her hotel room when abroad, might possibly have something to do with the appearance of the cornered visitor here, to say nothing of that rapidly recruiting host of American society girls who are being educated abroad, not so much for the learning they may absorb as for the acquaintances they are expected to make within the circle of marriageable aristocrats.

"It is in the nature of a woman to talk to a man as from behind a mask."

I am convinced that American heiresses marry foreigners for love in nine cases out of ten. The glamour of a title may have something to do with attracting an heiress, and arouse in her a sense of justifiable feminine curiosity to see what the owner and wearers of the dignity is like, but rarely does it influence her seriously in making the final choice. It would be charitable but misleading, to attribute this to some special moral tinge in the American heiress when the fact is that she does not usually know what a title means until she has been the part owner in one for quite some time.

Outside of the title there are potent reasons why the American heiress prefers the foreigner to her countryman. With her unshackled feminine intuition she is quick to see the decided divergences between the aristocrat and the plutocrat, and the difference between the aristocrat and the plutocrat. The heiress soon discovers in the foreigner a man who is not a creature of the factory chimney; he is not hopelessly immersed in the specialization of a trade outside of the sort of hum-drum chap that she feels she knows by heart the minute he opens his mouth and shows his face. On the contrary he appears to her in the light of mystery, inciting curiosity, defying exploration. She discovers in him a human whetstone capable of sharpening her wit and mentality.

Though she may have envied the role of the grande dame with all the dash of the proverbially "blazing" American title she is usually content at the close of the tit to take her place, with modesty, as a willing and eager listener rather than remain any longer in the presumptuous attitude of one who has the pleasure of the desirable attributes and accomplishments of the world. She feels she is learning something from the foreigner, who appears to her keener of observation and more versatile in his accomplishments, and more tolerantly comprehensive in his views rather than the inferior quality and provincial lead in cultural means of comparison.

It is in the nature of a woman to talk to a man as from behind a mask—her modesty, at all events, de-

"American Men? Pouf! My Hats"—Says Gaby Deslys

MRS. GABY DESLYS really has a lot to say about American men. She is going to give an extended article about American men that will deal with what she says are bitter truths; but she doesn't want to write it until she leaves for Paris. Before, now she would rather talk about her hats.

Miss Gaby, who is appearing at the Winter Garden, New York, here amplifies Baron De Witz's remarks a bit.

American men are in too much of a hurry to make good loves and husbands. They fall in love in a big hurry, in what you call a bubble, and when they fall out again, in a greater hurry.

An American man sees a pretty face, a graceful figure; he falls in love with it. This is today. Tomorrow he sees another pretty face, and other graceful figure and he falls out of love with it. He is not with that! He gets on with the new before he is off with the old!

Oh, I know! I have had the experience! The American men come to see me in Paris. They see me dance, they hear me sing, and that is enough! They want to make love before they know the color of my eyes.

They do not know how to pay graceful compliments! They love making is crude! They have no sense!

When the American man falls in love he hurries to show his love in a material way! This is right. Men exist but to shower gifts and love on women.

But love is not always expressed in pearls, in diamonds! A rose, a spray of lilies, if on a poor man means as much to me as pearls from a king.

As a lover the American man

My Secrets of Beauty

No. 146—How to TAKE CARE OF THE MOUTH
By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

MME. CAVALIERI'S article is of special value to-day, for it deals with a topic of general interest. How and why the mouth should be kept clean, fresh and sweet, she treats from the viewpoints both of health and beauty.

Mme.
Lina Cavalieri.

By Lina Cavalieri

NO one is well groomed who does not give careful attention to the toilet of the mouth. I use the word precisely as I intend, to signify the cleansing and "dressing up" of the mouth.

The first step in the very necessary process, necessary to both health and beauty, is to gargle. Every morning this should be most carefully done. I am sure that the daily morning gargle has slipped many a throat and lung disease at the beginning. It may even have saved many lives. Certainly it has been part of the cure of many diseases. The throat should be freed from the obstructions and droppings that have accumulated during the night, and to do this nothing suffers except the gargle. In some of the most advanced schools the morning gargle is part of the day's routine and night if it is punishable.

Into a tumblerful of hot water place a teaspoonful of coarse table salt. Let the salt dissolve before using.

Or dissolve "a" tumblerful of warm water a teaspoonful of borax.

Or in the same quantity of boiling water let a teaspoonful of boric acid dissolve.

Daily rinsing of the throat with any of these will reduce inflammation and keep one of the grand passageways of the body clean.

"Remove the coating of the tongue with a tongue scraper."

Next attention should be paid to the tongue. Purled or coated tongues are common but not for this reason less objectionable. The tongue should be cleaned as an essential part of the morning toilet. Gargle off the coating with one of the tongue scrapers now obtainable at any good drug store. I prefer the kind that are made in the shape of a small hoe. With this you can reach far back into the mouth and scrape away the accumulation from that part of the tongue which is the source of most unwholesomeness, the extreme back of the tongue. When you have scraped off the coating, doing this gently, of course, so that you will not scratch the tongue nor make it bleed, rinse the mouth with any good antiseptic wash.

For example, equal parts of peroxide of hydrogen and water are cleansing. To this mixture may be added a few drops of menthol.

In case you use this, be sure to immediately afterward rinse the mouth with milk of magnesia or a solution of soda to counteract the effect of the peroxide of hydrogen upon the teeth.

The mixture of bicarbonate of soda and warm water is in itself a good mouth wash.

The use of a soft toothbrush with a soft bristle is also a good adjunct to a good mouth wash. It never exists except in connection with a sweet stomach. If you under warm water, take two or three glasses, drinking it slowly, or, if you prefer cold water, drink the same quantity of that. I never advise drinking hot water under any circumstances. The juice of half a lemon in each glass of water helps to cleanse the stomach and corrects liverish tendencies.

This done, it is the time for brushing the teeth. I prefer to use tooth powders, since they have not the same wearing effect upon the teeth.

This is a most useful and can mean at home.

Precipitated chalk, 1 oz.

Powdered white castile soap, 1 oz.

Powdered orris root, 1/2 oz.

Oil of peppermint, 10 drops.

Glycerine, 1/2 oz.

Oil of jasmine or any favorite perfume may be substituted for the oil of peppermint, if desired.

Or, if you prefer to use a powder

now and then instead of the paste, use the following:

Powdered white chalk, 2 ozs.

2 drops of oil of orange or oil of lemon.

Don't give a few hurried strokes to the teeth and think your task done. Brush them with even strokes up and down in front, then at the back, then along the upper edges.

Scrutinize your lips in a hand glass.

Have they drooped during the night? Do their corners fall in an unbecoming and aging way, which is a bad habit of muscles, particularly the facial muscles, at night?

Close them upward. Smile at yourself in the mirror. Loosen them.

Turn the corners upward. Think of something amusing or agreeable that will keep the corners turned during the day.

Or they can be covered upward by cutting the corners as a child with his mother's finger, taking the lips gently of the outward corners between the thumb and forefinger and twisting and pushing them upward. Keeping on guard during the day against letting any emotion or mood of determination of the day draw the muscles back into their droop of the morning will help you to keep the mouth in its amiable lines. The eyes may be the mirror of the soul, but the mouth is the reflector of the disposition. The sweet-smiling woman nearly always has an attractive mouth, the ill-tempered woman almost never.

Last, apply some emollient to the lips, which dry quickly in the heat of a warm room or in the cold of the out of doors. A little country friend of mine made such an emollient lip salve by stirring into a jar of white vaseline a teaspoonful of beef juice. This lip salve at once prevents the drying effects of the weather, softens the lips and preserves their color and perfume them. Spermaceti ointment, 1/2 oz. Balsam of Peru, 8 grains. Alkanet-root, 8 grains. Oil of cloves, 3 drops. You could mix this with a brush a few drops of each hand and gently work the upper lip upward in the middle, giving it the arch so much admired.

"Scrutinize your lips in a handglass."

An essential part of the toilet of the mouth is to rinse it after each meal, so that lurking crumbs will be removed from the mouth instead of lingering there to cause decay of the teeth. To help this result do not use toothpicks, which are liable to irritate the gums, but dental floss.

And during the day have on your toilet table at home or on a car, in the office some antiseptic mouth wash that is not so strong as to be of great advantage to the mouth of the teeth. This is a good one in case the mouth is feverish.

Rosewater, 2 ozs.

Tincture of orris, 1 oz.

Alcohol, 1 oz.

Oil of peppermint, 20 drops.

The Care of House Plants—No. 6

By M. B. Gleason.

THE Aracoria exelsa, or Norfolk Island pine, is becoming better known as a plant for home decoration. It has an evergreen foliage that somewhat resembles the hemlock. Its "pinnules" are plentiful and of a very dark green color. The branches are produced in which Symmetry characterizes it in all stages of its growth. A young plant in a perfect tree in miniature it is sometimes called the Star pine because of its star-shaped whorls of branches. This plant needs a rich sandy loam. Water moderately and slower frequently, as the red spider is its worst enemy.

The Pandanus utilis, or screw pine, adapts itself to living-room culture, but care must be taken to prevent water from collecting in its centre or decay will soon set in. In showing its sure to lay the plant on its side so that no water will run down its leaves to the heart. Early leaf has sharp teeth along its edges, and some varieties are beautifully striped green and white. The Pandanus should not be kept far from the light and should always be in a moderately warm room.

Yucca plants and those whose leaves are little like the Queen Victoria's, are better known. It has a long, thick foliage of a silvery green bordered with yellow. A very old plant will often have ten or thirty leaves two or three feet in length. It will stand considerable frost and hard usage, but is also very sensitive of cold care, like all plants.

The English ivy is very easy to grow, and may drop gradually or be trained to grow in a circle. The latter often makes the most decorative plant for house culture. It is best in hanging baskets, in the trailing manner to the earth with ivy, and as the plant or as a tree it follows the edge of the pot until it becomes quite a large plant.

Greenhouse plants have become so numerous during the winter should be cut down in early Spring, and those with bare roots in spring foliage and be ready for early bloom. This requires a moderately rich soil and plenty of water and sunshine.

An old plant hump standard makes an effective plant stand, especially appropriate for ferns or lilies. Plants may be sprinkled without moving by taking a large square of heavy paper or aluminum, cutting a round hole in the centre and making a slit from one edge to the hole. Slip this around the roots of the plant, and if the plant is large enough the sheet of paper will be kept dry when sprinkling is done.

Very Odd Discoveries.

*The New Goblin Shark,
the Nondescript Bird and the Oxygen Tank*

EVERY now and then the zoological world is startled by the discovery of a new species in Japan's warm waters of rare or hitherto unheard of animals. So many strange specimens, many of them quite extinct in other parts of the world, have been found in the deep waters of Japan that scientists keep in close touch with Japanese fishermen.

Not long ago Japanese fishermen caught a most grotesque type of shark. They called it the Tengu shark, or goblin shark, but it was scientifically christened Mitsukurina owstoni, in honor of Mitsukurina, a well-known Japanese zoologist, and Mr. Alan Owston, an animal dealer of Yokohama, who called the Jordan, the authority on Japanese fish. The new specimen, which measured 10.5 centimeters, was first presented to the National Museum at Washington, D. C. It is soft and pliable. Even after hardening in a preservative for several weeks it can be rolled into a ball. Its most remarkable feature perhaps is the curiously elongated nose which, together with its protruding jaw, gives it its peculiar goblin like appearance. The teeth are sharp and slender, each like the pointed end of an awl. They must constitute a most formidable weapon in the fish's life and must be figured with caution even after the fish's death. Altogether this shark is so different from every other specimen hitherto

But the one in the National Museum is the only one of its kind so far discovered.

Another remarkable discovery which is interesting zoologists is the discovery that a single species of bird which flew on board the battleship North Dakota while off Hampton Roads. The crew caught it and brought it to New York, where it was turned over to Mr. Snyder, the bird expert of the New York Zoological Park, who declared that the bird was an "eximia" to him. Other authorities who have seen it were equally at a loss.

This rare, discovered bird is as black as a raven, stands fifteen inches high and measures forty inches in length to wing tip.

supply of fresh air from the tank through a rubber tube which is kept in the mouth. The tank holds enough oxygen to last ten hours.

Mine workers and tunnel diggers who have to work in underground passages where the danger of a cave-in is ever imminent, will find this new discovery of great value.

An entirely new method of preparing insects and other animals for and the specimen heated in an oven.

So far the new method has worked extremely satisfactorily although it requires certain amount of practice and skill to prepare delicate sections. The speaker is hopeful that the new method will be generally adopted and that the danger of losing rare specimens through the deterioration of embalming material will be thus eliminated.

attention of the geologists to the strange specimen. More recently, however, this name has been supplanted by Scapanorhynchus, a name that had previously been applied to the teeth of the rocks of the chalk period.

Now an even more remarkable specimen of the goblin shark has turned up. It has been called Scapanorhynchus Jordani—the specific name being given in honor of resembles most nearly the great billed auk of the Falkland Islands, although it is in no way related to that specimen. If it came from that region, as the experts believe, it must have flown a long way, for the islands are ninety thousand miles away from where the bird was caught.

The new goblin shark differs from the kind already known in that its jaw is less protruding, the spracle is much smaller and the eye is situated opposite the middle of the jaw instead of the back of it.

Of a different nature is the discovery of a French engineer. After experimenting for a number of ears, he has at last perfected a apparatus for the use of firemen in underground workers and other whose occupations require them to frequent places where the supply of pure air is limited or absent.

It consists of an oxygen tank which is strapped to the wearer's back and in no way interferes with his movements. The supply of oxygen thus becomes available in a smoke-filled room, where a fireman crawling on hands and knees, or writhing along the floor—where the air is most treacherous—may, by the touch of a button receive a

FOR several hundred years physicians and specialists in the field of embryology have racked their brains trying to explain the baffling mystery concerning human life—the mystery of multiple twinning (usually twins) and the still more baffling mystery of conjoined twinning. But now, for the first time, it is possible to determine the sex of the boy or girl that is to be.

That further probing into these problems may come, some time, came to each at about night on the other, if not completely solve them, is suggested by Dr. James Oliver, physician to the London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, in the London Lancet.

Dr. Oliver, who has treated 24 patients out of every 250 that I now have once or often seen, has observed that it is not that rare, as is often said, that is, of about 1 in 104, and he has observed the existence of an hereditary tendency to twinning in the London families in which there can be no doubt.

Dr. Oliver has observed that in a group of 24 it is observed that there are 23 sets of twins, as one patient had borne two children, some time, some time, each had each had twins twice. The twins in 13 instances are boy and girl, in 10 are two girls, and in only 3 are they two boys. The

In a few cases where, for example, a crown was to make a fabulous sum of money, the king was paid and made to ensure max property, but the indeterminate use of max is not a cure rather than a blessing. It is not a cure, but a blessing to believe, conduce to domestic happiness.

And the philosophers and physicians of old were, are, and will be, to neglect that in the case of the majority of men, the max is not a fact upon operation enter them in the max of the max is not more precise than their max, as in much as we know that max is necessary for the fertilization of a seed.

In the case of man we recognize two different types of twins—max and max. The max is the type that it is difficult to believe that they could possibly have been born of the same mother, and the max is the type that it is difficult to believe that they could possibly have been born of the same mother. The max is the type that it is difficult to believe that they could possibly have been born of the same mother, and the max is the type that it is difficult to believe that they could possibly have been born of the same mother.

We are induced to believe that the latter result from the splitting into two of one spermatozoon, but it is difficult to understand why this should be so.

together 37 females and 11 males, a proportion, that is, of practically 2 to 1. The results of the experiment, however, are fairly consistent with the results of the female to male ratio of 2 to 1.

In the case of the human race and the other mammals, the results are somewhat surprising, inasmuch as the prevailing opinion is driven to the conclusion that there must be some force or influence at work which affects the relationship of male to female in more than ten to one. In the years philosophers and physicians alike have diligently endeavored to seek out and elucidate these forces, but so far their efforts have been without success. It is, however, a fact, and I am confident that this has been a blessing and not a misfortune, that it is never probable that if we should ever succeed in ascertaining the forces which govern the equilibrium of the sexes the utilization of the knowledge would be fraught with evil rather than good to humanity, and might even lead eventually to the extermination of the human race.

Physically and mentally.

Twins are born at the rate of 1 in 250, and are produced by consequence of the splitting of one fertilized ovum into two embryos, usually two and they may rarely be more than two. They are merely because the two are really identical.

Now the hereditary tendency to the production of twins is an opinion transmitted about equally by males and females, and as the male is the sex which predominates in the production of twins, it intersects with a woman possessing the tendency to produce twins, and the result is a greater possibility of a twinning. This is the only explanation that is likely probable that the majority of twins are produced by the union of sperm and ovum.

Men and women.

In dealing with the question of the number of sexes we must at the outset recognize the fact that not only is the sex of the individual determined, but in the case also of individual female animals we find a prime factor in the production of the sex, and it is the sex of the parent, or rather rather than the sex of the mother, which is the determining factor, in the case of the female, who in another way

Good-by, Corns No Wait--No Pain

Just listen to this. There is a little plaster which holds a bit of soft wax—a wondrous invention called B & B wax. This little plaster is applied in a jiffy, and the pain of the corn stops instantly.

But that isn't all. That bit of soft B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In two days the corn comes out. No pain, no soreness, no inconvenience—no feeling whatever. The callous simply separates itself from the toe, and the trouble ends.

Five million corns annually are removed in this way—removed by Blue-jay plasters. Get a package—and yours, too. Don't temporize with corns.

A In the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B Protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
